Marks raises a good point. Why do you accuse people of pedophilia?
Are you licensed to do so?

You don't wear them any anymore? Tsk, tsk. No wonder you don't show that picture anymore. How many times have you lost your job at hospitals in the last year?

Southeast Region. [southeast region is 6 states including TN]
Later on in this Newsletter is a text pat-on-the-back for two CAP members, one of which is "Capt Steve Robeson."

If a "vice commander" is NOT a superior officer, then the "vice" means something else?

Tsk, you are getting your misogyny all ruffled.

"Never?" What does a Vice Commander of the Southeast Region DO and how is she in the chain of command? Let's see...by the Newsletter's own writing, the "southeast region" includes Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, Puerto Rico, and, of course, TENNESSEE.

Remember your IMPORTANCE in the scheme of things...you were
"homeland security before there was homeland security!"

www.tnsg.us

Looks like it is still a Good Ol' Boys club playin' sojer in da woods. No pay. All volunteer. They get to wear nice uniforms with pretty medals, call themselves a "force mulitplier!" Yeah, their Table of Organization seems to be mostly Military Police units. "MP" not SP. Note the confusion between MP and SP that Frank wrote about in another thread.

> I never served under a female commander in the Marine Corps.

Of course not. You couldn't stand it, militant misogynist and all. You probably would have called a USMC female superior officer a "CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL NITWIT!"

Does Dudly consider the Naval Academy, Annapolis, MD, a
"CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL?" I'm sure you do.

Does Dudly consider all women "NITWITS?" I'm sure you do.

Keep standing, "Jarhead."

Go to the home page of sujan.hallikainen.org and use links to get to military radios.

Over on Harold Hallikainen's Radio History website, in the uploads section, are some more PDFs on RADIO. Three in all. "AlphabetSoup" is a digitization of a 1962 booklet published by the Japan Signal Overseas Battalion (a merge of the 71st Sig Bn and 72nd Sig Bn that happened after I left for the States in 1956), describing the ADA station functions and equipment as it was, lots more RADIO equipment; supplied by James Brendage, a civilian engineer and Department of the Army and Department of the Air Force employee, who is retired and living in California. Jim Brendage was working at ADA transmitter site when I was assigned there and we corresponded by surface and e-mail after 2000. "The First Walkie Talkie" is about the SCR-300 / BC-1000 VHF two-way backpack FM transceiver that was designed by Motorola (that you insisted "didn't exist" in WW2!), made by them, and was used in all theaters of operation up to and including the Korean War.
Includes some specific design features of the Walkie-Talkie with some schematics obtained from the TM on that radio. The "Microwave Radio Relay" PDF is a general description of that as it was used by land forces from WW2 onwards...including the
AN/FRC-23 and AN/FRC-35 that I was a supervisor of and operated.

You might look elsewhere on that site and see, under "National"
[Radio] a digitization of the supplied manual for their 7-inch VHF-channels-only television set of 1948-1949. I had one then, bought it for me and my parents out of MY earnings in part-time jobs. Strictly for nostalgia purposes that digitization, was a good set at the time but not quite state-of-the-art then.

If you go to the home page links to USAER (that's U.S. Army in Europe) history pages and look under Signal units, you can see a Node Diagram and Station Block Diagram of ACAN (Army Command and Administrative Network) as it was in the 50s and 60s, a worldwide HF network that did supply some circuits to the Department of State. I supplied that to the webmaster via e-mail since I had the diagrams from official sources.

Stand down, Jarhead.

Dudly definition of "numerous": "Working" his alternate personalities, his wife, regulars in this newsgroup. Where are the OTHERS?

No one can "refuse to use" something that doesn't exist.

your wife and regulars in this newsgroup?

No "double standard" on the NCTA side. No "lies" despite your multiple personalities hopping up and down in "outrage"
and not being able to "beat up" your challengers.

Right, we are agreed...you used the WRONG slogans, the WRONG

the REAL Marines handle the jargon...they are all in agreement with Frank...and in DISAGREEMENT with your gems in here, Dud.

> Did you show them where YOU used the deaths of Army KIA's to >polish your USENET brasss with, Scumbag...?!?!

Sorry, you HATING little imposter, I mentioned the 23 members of MY Signal Battalion in HONOR OF THEM. 19 that died in a transport crash on 1 Jul 50 in Korea to reinforce Signal operations after the North Koreans had invaded South Korea.
The other four were killed in individual actions while on temporary duty in Korea, two before the July 1953 truce signing, two after that start of the "forever truce" (the Korean War has NOT officially ended and "truce talks" continue as they have for 52 years). All of them get remembered. I have all their names, ranks, ASNs, their home towns. All assigned to one Signal Battalion, the 8235th Army Unit. The Battalion HONORED their memory at each Retreat Ceremony. The first billet of the 8235th was Hardy Barracks, Tokyo, named for Corporal Elmer Hardy in his honor. The new transmitter site at Kashiwa, NE of Tokyo, was named Camp Tomlinson in 1956 in honor of Frank Tomlinson. Both were victims of the 1 Jul 50 crash. Camp Tomlinson was retained as a name when control of the ADA facilities were transferred to the USAF in 1963.

I have NO need to "polish brass" through mentioning that I HONOR their memory. My work and efforts while assigned to the 8235th AU were all the "brass polish" I ever needed.
That work and effort got me promotions from Private E-2 (at first assignment) to Sergeant E-5 (on release from service) in two years, meeting the minimum time-in-grade required at the time at each level.

Perhaps you'd like to meet some of the "brass polishers" out here who assemble at the Veteran's Cemetary in Westwood (close to the huge UCLA campus in case you're shy on big-city geography) ever Memorial Day and Veteran's Day? Most are middle-aged like yourself. A few are younger guys. Maybe you'd like to holler at them as well as me about "brass polishing their own images" while we bow our heads in prayer for the veterans and place a few American flags on graves? No, I don't think so...your physical safety would be in peril.

> And Lennie, I knew/know enough about "radio theory" to have passed >the FCC examinations for an Amateur Extra license.
> You obvioulsy haven't.

"Obviously."

WOW! Aren't you some "genius" in radio theory!

Imagine that! You got an AMATEUR Extra license!

No sweat, Dud, I passed a First Class Radiotelephone (Commercial) Radio Operator license exam in one sitting in a Chicago FCC Field Office in March 1956. Couldn't get a Commercial Q&A book before then, but I got to borrow the entire loose-leaf (then the format) FCC regulations from a friend at a broadcast station and memorized them. I already KNEW the theory needed for either commercial or amateur radio of the time. Was a matter of filling out the forms, drawing a couple schematics, only strain being to remember the right regulations. Only other "problem" was an interruption for a fire drill in the Chicago Federal Building in between 2nd and 3rd elements. That stretched the test time out to about two hours...two of the test elements were "essay" type where one had to write out answers; other two were multiple-choice. Did I know the answers? Yes, but I didn't need any open-pool information as there is now since I ALREADY knew enough "radio theory."

So...you charge that I "don't KNOW enough 'radio theory' to get an amateur radio license?" After taking many college-level semester final exams in electronics theory and finally the final for a degree? After many years as an electronics design engineer and obtaining a sole-inventor patent about radio? I'm sure you THINK that in your own little psychotic way but it would be a snap today to outshine you three ways from Sunday on a REAL "radio theory" test. :-)

> You're not "regular folks", Lennie.
> You're a pathological liar.

Tsk, tsk, tsk. That "mirror syndrome" reveals itself again. Dud looks in the computer screen, sees his own reflection, and insults that. :-)

You've misused "pathological" for years. If you say no, then you admit to posing as a real Medical Doctor, something you are NOT. Real MDs are into pathology. A better insult word would have been "congenital"; i.e., from birth.

Tsk, you use "liar" for everyone who just disagrees with your opinions. That's also wrong use of words. It is also indicative of a deep psychological condition that prevents you from handling ANY disagreement. [one of the things learned in Psych 101-102 courses once required in California for many Bachelors degrees]

Tsk, tsk, you've gone into great lengths on your (mistaken)
USMC life, military helicopters, personal weapons shooting, volunteering as part of the Tennessee STATE Guard, Civil Air Patrol...even the aerospace business and electronics engineering expertise, not to mention blabbering about national and foreign policy of the United States. Is that "all about See above. :-)

>Heil.

"Amateur" is unpaid, for personal activity in definition.
I've been a hobbyist in electronics and radio since 1947.

The Johnson Viking Messenger was made solely for Citizens Band Radio Service use.

> Care to show us your tiny Johnson, Lennie?

No, it might make you distraught. I can find a website that does have a picture of a Johnson Viking Messenger. I came across one a few years ago while hunting for more information on a Bendix CB transceiver that I still have; same size as the Johnson, slightly different circuitry. Got it at a discount, new, from Stan Beer, a Bendix field engineer at the time (1960).

I already have digitized photos of my indoor workshop. That includes an HP 606 and HP 608D RF signal generator, two dual-trace oscilloscopes (50 MHz Philips, 60 MHz Protek), frequency and period counter (my design in a ready-built cabinet, newly converted to LED 7-segment display from old Amperex numeric display similar to Nixies), ancient Heathkit audio generator (up to 1 MHz), one 4 1/2 digit DVM, two 3 1/2 digit DVMs, Boonton 190A Q-Meter, Circuit Specialists dual regulated supply (digital readout), the last remaining single regulated voltage-current DC supply that was the subject of a 1969 two-issue Popular Electronics article (had three others but those got built into other equipment), an all-purpose dual pulse generator (own design) which includes an NTSC sync generator (won't be of much use in the future due to HDTV), a Heathkit audio IM distortion analyzer, a 60 KHz WWVB "receiver" (TRF, loop antenna is in the attic space above) for phase-locking a 10 MHz crystal oscillator used as a secondary frequency standard (still playing with new ways to arrange the PLL). Oops, forgot the AADE L-C Meter, an extremely useful little thing for winding toroids to exact Henries, a small capacitance meter that reads to 0.1 pFd on lowest (100

pFd) scale, my own-built adjustable AC line supply with expanded-scale voltmeter. There's also a full Apple ][+ computer with two 5" disk drives, 9" and 12" monitors but those hardly see any use now...also the UV erase and reprogramming dingus (also home built) for EPROMs. In that compact space is a 3' x 4' drafting board (don't use the K&E drafting machine now, just the scales) which doubles as an illustrator's board for art work. Workbench is 7 feet wide, cabinets above and below. Rebuilt that whole center room myself from plans drawn up on drafting table mentioned. Came together nicely.

Of course, since you so strenuously objected to receiving digitized files through e-mail, you won't get those images.

Of what relevance is going on and on and on about a supposed
"career" in the USMC, volunteerism in the TN STATE Guard, and Civil Air Patrol? However, if you HAD mentioned some of the USMC radio equipment, it MIGHT have given you some creedence.
Since you didn't, your believability went into the dumpster.

If you cannot be accurate on your descriptions of military life, then you cannot be considered accurate in your descriptions of civilian life.

> Then whatEVER avionics I operate is STILL more avionics than YOU >operate!

In the Civil Air Patrol? :-)

Poor Dudly, trying to outshine someone who has DESIGNED part of the test set for a DME-Transponder-TACAN test set at Microradionics, Inc., and a TACAN test set at RCA Corporation.
Tsk, tsk, I've OPERATED both civil and military avionics in-flight, civil radio-nav radios including the omnibearing selector (for navigation) as both student pilot and later as passenger. Need a full-size Jepp plotter? Got one. :-) Piece of cake. Simple stuff.

I'd add some airborne radars in there but you might go bananas. :-) The three generations of RCA Corp. SECANT aren't counted since those were R&D programs and wouldn't be in any USMC aircraft.

> Sorry, Lennie, More facts that you can't seem to deal with....

> Seems the Marine Corps thinks differently than you.

No, sweetums, the USMC does NOT "think differently." YOU think differently than reality.

MARS is the amalgam of a special services morale builder and a sort-of "linkage" between the military and other U.S. government agencies. It is NOT any sort of mainstay of the Defence Communications System (DCS) or the Digital Switched Network (DSN). MARS is useful as a last-ditch fall-back radio thing "should everything else fail" (which it won't) and it keeps some folks occupied...but it was NEVER any sort of integral part of any military branch's worldwide communications network.

In the late 1960s and very early 1970s, MARS can be praised for doing a massive amount of phone-patches for service people in Southeast Asia. The United States Army Center for Military History says that in one long history paper. But, the "usefulness" of MARS for that sort of personal communications dwindled to a trickle with the coming of the Internet and the connectability of the DSN to the Internet.
With the increase of small computers in the field (as well as PCs on board water vessels), it became common for service people to communicate directly with family and friends through e-mail and, in slowly-increasing use, VoIP. MARS, to justify its existance, turned to the role of "liason" with other government agencies and exercises such as "Grecian Firebolt." The Vietnam War ended 30 years ago and the old MARS paradigms have bitten the dust now.

It would be to an AMATEUR, a poseur about REAL communications who has no real interest in the HF communications methods that formed the basis for today's HF use by amateurs.

You say it is "boring" only to attempt a left-handed insult again. TRUTH is often boring and what you want is a lot of falsehoods about YOURSELF to make YOU "look good."

That PDF on Hal's radio history website is the TRUTH as it was in the 1950s. It's been verified by N2JTV (who was there at the same time I was) and James Brendage, a civilian engineer employed by the Army (also there the same time I was). The accompanying "AlphabetSoup.pdf" was prepared by a Signal Battalion that did the communications operations.

It is "boring" to you because you resent NOT being in a similar assignment and did NOTHING LIKE THAT in the military.

> No, you didn't "work(ed) massive long-distance HF >communications..."

Signalmen are all pro, always were, always will be. Signal Corps didn't play around in hobby fashion with "radiosport" contests on HF. We got the messages through. 220 thousand a month at ADA, a million and a quarter a month at WAR. Circuits from Tokyo to Alaska, Hawaii, San Francisco, Manila, etc. were LONG.

> You were a radio mechanic. Nothing more, according to your MOS.

Incorrect. The Army has mechanics, but those are all in the motor pool working on vehicles. My MOS was "Microwave Radio Relay Operations and Maintenance Supervisor" (281.6 in the old MOS designation).

> You were not a radio OPERATOR...Nor were you a message center >clerk.

The 8235th Army Unit did NOT operate any "message center." It operated a huge radio transmitter-receiver-torn-tape-relay station serving the Far East Command Headquarters.

The 8235th AU (a battalion strength) did not have one single morse code operator on its TO&E, did not use any morse code modes. I was never a "clerk" of any kind.

I did not "operate receivers" because I was not assigned to the receiver site at Camp Owada, NW of Tokyo. After visiting there several times, it is evident that no one there or with the USAF sharing the site did any morse code "operating." The HF communications modes were, in order of use: TTY, Voice, Facsimile. SSB circuits used the "commercial format" of 12 KHz bandwidth, frequency-multiplexing 4 voice bandwidth circuits; on voice circuit was used as an order-wire, the second voice circuit for "overseas radiotelephone," the remaining two circuits for TTY tones (typically 6 to 12 separate teleprinter circuits). Some of the RTTY radio circuits had time-multiplexing for carrying 4 separate TTY circuits on one radio via USN-contract multiplexer operated by the Carrier crew ("carrier" in the telephony jargon, not Navy).

The purpose of the Army-USAF facility was to maintain world-wide communications over ACAN-STARCOM-DCS 24/7, not to be some sort of Special Services morale builder with hobby activities and phone-patches. Before the commsat era, HF was the only practical long-haul communications means for the U.S. military. The Army did its part with ACAN-STARCOM-DCS and the teletypewriter was the key ingredient to insure both accuracy, readability, and security. The USAF continued that role, being assigned control of the station ADA facilities in 1963 and kept it operational to 1978 when the land and buildings were turned over to the Japanese government. Callsign ADA remains today, now the callsign of the United States Army Pacific, headquartered in Fort Shafter, Hawaii. HF communications in the military is now in a secondary position, used as a back-up mode.

Yes, I was not a MORSE CODE operator. Never pretended to be. The Army just didn't depend on morse code for communications over long radio routes, nor could morse code modes handle the volume of traffic required to maintain worldwide units and logistics and security needs. The Army, indeed all the service branches don't use morse code for communications now, any radio path length. They don't need to. They are pros, not amateurs.

There is no evidence to support your Johnson, either... :-)

[do you need a new supporter, scampering frisky one?]

Here's a DOS Tip, heaping-big chief-of-the-keys: Just make a formal statement to the FCC. WT Docket 05-235 is still OPEN. You can file your little black heart out, taking me to task for DARING to comment on something you have "vested interest" in. You WILL be in public view for as long as the Commission keeps that Docket open for public view.

[WT Docket 98-143 is still open to the public for viewing long after FCC 99-412 ordered the Restructuring of 2000; you can even file on that one arguing NPRM 98-143]

If you need a model for a denunciatory reply to anyone, go to that WT Docket 98-143, search for surname Robeson at date 25 January 1999. There it is, "saddled and waiting."

Of course, the FCC isn't considering such Comments after the official ending date, but that is irrelevant to your lofty purpose, isn't it? You are busy, busy, busy in trying to shut up opposing opinions any which way you can. Better improve on that because it isn't working.

Keep the faith and keep on truckin to remove First Amendment rights to every citizen who doesn't have an official amateur radio license. Need a copy of "My Camp" in its original language?

Seig Heil!

All very good and logical but it doesn't have the full support of the elite ruling NAAR (formerly ARRL) membership. Here is a much shorter version:

97.1 Amateur Radio Service is whatever NAAR says it is.

97.2 Refer to 97.1.

There, that should give NAAR what what it has wanted all along, assures the ARRL Press division to keep on printin' and making money for the League, thereby keeping Dave S. assured of pulling down $150K a year for as long as he is Trustee of the "Residence Radio Club." The Church of St. Hiram can be assured of a full collection plate and all may live happily ever after on Fantasy Island with Mr. Roarke and Tattoo and reruns. Everyone licensed before 11 Sep 01 gets a lovely medal for being "homeland security before there was homeland security"
and a nice certificate, suitable for framing.

I've met people like you, Len. They're all about what positions they've held, how much they made, the cost of their home(s), the brand and year of the car they drive. They miss a lot of life. They never seem to do anything for the love of it.

It isn't just about baby steps (not baby shoes), is it? You don't care to join an activity where you'd still be considered a beginner, do you? I mean, you haven't achieved the neophyte level in amateur radio.

It'll likely never be understood by folks, Len. After all, you aren't remotely involved in amateur radio. It sounds as if you have an obsession.

That's simply incorrect, Leonard. You insult anyone who favors retention of morse testing in amateur radio. I don't recall a single soul who claims that morse code represents cutting edge technology.

> Jimmie, WHY do YOU continue to insult, demean, anatagonize all

"Jimmie", "Brother of Dudly", "Reverend Jimmie", "Nun of the Above". Do any of those sound familiar to you? Would you prefer to see a more complete list of your insulting, demeaning and antagonistic names for folks?

> Why are YOU so obsessed with retaining it?

Please explain how retention of morse testing is regression in any form.
After all, morse code is used daily by thousands of radio amateurs.

Are you being affectionate, Len? You've come up with a number of "affectionate names" for people who post here and who disagree with your

You continue to complain that others insult or denigrate you. You've told Jim that he never had any "PRIDE" in his work. You go on to call him "Brother of Dudly". Do you consider your behavior to be rude? Are the smileys supposed to excuse your churlish manner? :-) :-)

You can't blame Jim for not wanting to talk shop with you. Look what has happened to others who have revealed details of their work (and who happen to favor retention of morse testing). You make up derogatory names for those folks and you insult their jobs and military service.

Gee, Lennie, you are constantly AGAINST the retention of morse code
testing in amateur radio. Imagine that.

given the flaming I got over not knowing what some aphabet soup meant I wonder what will happen to Jim for blowing that one 10 meters BTW extends from 28MHZ to 29.7MHZ 12 meter as an aside runs from 24.890
*24.990

meaning jim has called the B band and the 10 meter combined with a section above that as 10 metters amuch bigger error i sghould think than my not knowing some alphabet soup

but Stevie will show his double standard again

Let's go through it, shall we? Pro-coders (one can only wonder if Len means those who favored morse testing, those who favored morse use or those who were simply proficient at morse code) made up their own regulations. It isn't explained how or if these "pro-coders" all became Extra Class ticket holders. Extra Class license holders can't obtain that license without passing the most difficult theory and regulatory written exam offered in U.S. amateur radio and not all of those with morse code skills became Extra Class licensees. Len's statement appears to have some gaping holes.

One can now obtain it with s very slow f i v e w o r d p e r

The truth can be found in the hundreds of accounts that are available

Well by golly, you -REALLY CAN- provide proof of something. It wasn't that hard, was it, Dudly? Or did Han's send you the info in an email? Either way, you were willing and able to address the issue. Progress!

> Need some more Kleenex to clean off that bloody nose, punk?

Nope, and you are too dumb to see that you just gave -yourself- a bloody nose.

> I snipped the rest.

I'll do you a favor and 'unsnip' it so you can address the issues just like you addressed the MP/SP issue. If you like I can repost my allegations with quotes from your own posts so you can address them more specifically -- would that help, Dud?

Ok, let's try this again.....

You didn't know that avionics techs (your alleged MOS) are regularly deployed with the FMF.

You didn't know about the VINSON system. To wit: "I know who Col Vinson was and I know where Ft Gordon is. Never served with him/for him/within 100 miles of him." Neither did you know that the VINSON system replaced almost all outdated crypto systems in the late '70's, including the old punch-pin monsters (KY-28/38 of the NESTOR system, which had been almost completely replaced by the VINSON system by the early '80's).

You didn't know the difference between a 'hitch', a 'cruise', and a 'float'.

You mistakenly assumed the origination of the phrase "One Shot One Kill" was from the Army Sniper School; wrongfully presumed that it is a tactic taught to all Marine recruits; then proceeded to demonstrate your ignorance about basic combat tactics, the use of shotguns, and the very common 40mm grenade launchers (M-79 & M-203).

You claimed that "the only targets used to train Marine riflemen (and all recruits) [are] head shots and 'center mast', or chest shots", but didn't know that the standard round marksmanship-type targets are also used, and much more often than "dog" targets. In fact, most of rifle qualification is done with the round targets. But you didn't know that despite your claim to have "[taken] home an 'Rifle Expert' on each and every trip to the range".

You didn't know that only the results of an Article 15 proceeding are recorded, not the entire proceedings; and you don't even know what page in the SRB they are recorded.

You didn't know that Marines are often prohibited from taking any off-duty employment, nor did you know that such a decision is usually made by the CO, not HQMC.

You didn't know that outside communications can be prohibited during a base lock-down or unit activation.

You defined a 'chit' as "A Naval term for a 'permission slip'", when in fact it means -any- piece of paper with something written on it.

You didn't know that a dishonorable discharge can only be given as a result of a conviction in a General court-martial, and is usually given after a few years at Leavenworth and a reduction to Private.

You didn't know that the Corps doesn't use cutting scores for promotions.

You misquoted your SIX alleged promotion certificates (a misquote that I later found on google verbatim).

You didn't understand that "years and months in specialty" (box 11 on the DD-214) is not the same as time in service, yet claimed that you have -several- DD-214's.

You claimed that time on the delayed entry program was considered to be time in reserve status but never was.

You stated that "My DD-214 says 'Honorable'...", yet after 1979 there is no box on the form to designate character of service. The DD-214 is only a "release or discharge from active duty", not a final discharge certificate. Only that latter will denote the character of service.

You claimed to have served from 03 September, 1974 to 29 May, 1992. That's only 17 years and 9 months. Yet you also claim to be retired, which can only happen if you served 20 years. You also claimed to have been discharged for medical reasons, having your discharge later upgraded (a claim which you have both denied and acknowledged). You didn't know that medical discharges cannot be upgraded, nor that time not served cannot be arbitrarily added to the end of an enlistment in order to obtain retirement benefits.

BTW, my MOS was 2841 which is "ground radio repair", not "ground radar repair".

And you still haven't answered one really basic question: With all your careers, activities and obligations, where do you find the time to post as much as you do on Usenet?

> You can "argue" that I was trying to be "evasive",

.....and it would be a valid argument.

> but the truth >of the matter is that YOU are the one with credibility issues here, and

The truth of the matter is that you want your dessert but you aren't eating your veggies.

> In short, you're a disgusting little troll looking to be a big >disgusting troll....

No, Dud, I already -=AM=- a big disgusting troll. But that's a far better thing to be than a Marine Corps imposter.

> Putz.

Well gee, if that's the way you are going to be I might as well tip my King now, huh? I mean, that's about the most persuasive argument that you have made in your defense since this discussion began. How can I possibly ever counter something so monumentally substantial as you calling me "Putz"? I'm doomed........LOL!!!!!

I've been on the internet for over 15 years, and was networking locally about 12 years before that using a dual 8" floppy DEC and a Silent 700 with built-in modem pushing 300 baud -- I can wait.

No, "meaiing" you are incapable of comprehending your own part in the discussion.

I disagree, Mark. If Todd wasn't eager to advertise his little web site and so quick to comment on the meaning of Japanese words use in its description, the matter would likely not be broached.

Likewise, if there weren't posts to public newsgroups outlining your own deviant behavior, most folks would be blissfully unaware that they had a pervert in their midst. You'd be known only as a misguided fabricator who refuses to use a spell checker.

but I ask the question you and stevie refuse to answer like the cowards you are

what does anybodies sexuality have to do with the ARS?

simple enough question but one you avoid like the plauge itself

the answer is nothing and yet you and stevie having nothing of your own to offer up choose to enage in deabte over sexuality rather than issues

you are a coward and a fraud

I wonder why several of the posters here lend any credence whatsoever to Lennie's posts? Lennie is obviously an Old Troll who entertains himself by bloviating. Dan was correct when he referred to Lennie as a Troll, a comment that showed Lennie's true colors when Lennie responded to Dan with no small amount of gutter language.

Lennie showed his true, inner self with that response.

Lennie is much akin to a stray cat that wanders upon your front porch and mewls until you feed him. If you ignore him long enough he will eventually go away to darken someone else's life.

You need to get K1MAN and Walter Cronkite on your show to debate each other with Geraldo Reveria as moderator. Every ham in the world would tune in to listen. And you might even get CBS to send a reporter since it has an interest in Cronkite.

Yeah! Perhaps they could send Dan Rather to report. Only problem with Rather is that he cannot separate facts from lies.
He'd be right at home with Baxter.

However,

[ ] In the UK, no repeat no licence of any kind is necessary to specify, design, construct, modify, repair, own, or (under some circumstances) test an Amateur transmitter.

[ ] A pass in a current examination for a UK Amateur Licence qualifies the successful candidate for the issue of a UK Licence. Holders of the appropriate levels of licence are permitted to operate transmitting equipment that is not subject to a formal approvals procedure, and to carry out technical investigations. A qualification for a Licence, or the Licence itself, is not, repeat not, a qualification to specify, design, construct, modify, repair, or own transmitting equipment.

Stand-by for more "flaming", Mark.

I know the concept may be a bit foreign to you, but Jim hampton was being facetious. Those who participate in "freebanding" consider that part of the spectrum (25Mhz to 32Mhz) to be "theirs". That is the range that many "export CB's" cover when "opened" for "freeband" operation.

"B band"...?!?! I won't even venture a guess.

Your scope of awareness of present day reality of "radio policy and practice" is far too narrow, Mark.

As for "alphabet soup", it's part of what you're supposed to know as a Commission licensee...

No one expects you to memorize them, however you should be able to RECOGNIZE them, realize what they are and look them up in the proper regulation and then comply with the regulation.

> but Stevie will show his double standard again

Nope. Just pointing out that you are, once again, ill-prepared to address the subjects, Mark. You tried to "redress" Jim Hampton based on YOUR lack of understanding, not HIS "error" for refering to it as "10 meters".

There's nothing to work with with Jim.

He's already establsihed a track record of NOT calling people by diminutives.

He doesn't do it to Lennie...he doesn't do it to Mark or you.

So...What's YOUR excuse for doing it to him?

Yes we HAVE gone this rout before...And when you started back in on the diminutives and mistruths, I asked you point-blank if that's what you wanted. You indicated you "could take anything you can hand out"....

OK...We played your game.

Dan has shown his true inner colors numerous times on RRAP, especially That's "Frank." Remember our little agreement?

Like I said, we'll start with you and when you've shown improvement for some period of time, we can move on to Jim. Jim may take only a minute or two, but I'm trying to be inclusive here.

You're not paying attention to attributions. I've ceased calling him
Rev Jim because of his unRev-like bahavior. I do not call him "Jimmie"

> He's never done anything similar to you that I am even remotelya

I was through with Jim when he said that a Morse Code test would be a barrier to Morse Code use, then tried to reneg on it. Yet it is precisely true and is what I've been on here about. Now Jim is only about being Len's adversary. He's run out of substance.

There is no other "practice." The things I have posted today are Quitesimilar the the things that I posted last week.

It is you who must reach for a higher standard.

The diminuitives AND the mistruths. The diminuitives are posted by other people, but the "mistruths" part...

That's where this whole thing is going to fall apart. You don't have a good concept on what constitutes the truth.

Steve, I have no problem being civil with people on RRAP. Been doing most of my time here. Like your concept on truth, you have trouble differentiating between me and other posters on RRAP.

No.

Who wrote:

lives in hurricanes [Katrina]!"

in their comments to FCC?

It wasn't me.

You write it as a direct quote, and you claim to have read all the comments.
So it should be easy for you to name the author(s).

No. But there are similar things that make you look like a complete

Why? I'm not making the claim - those who took both written exams made it. Ask them.

So? You never completed any amateur radio test element.

You apparently don't know that, because you wrote:

"Way back in time the pro-coders managed to set themselves up as "extra" amateurs BECAUSE of their telegraphy skill, all through lobbying to keep morse code as the "hot ticket.""

> >Do you think nobody will use Morse Code when the test is gone?

Not at all.

I'm refusing to accept the procedural mistakes of your highly biased and error-prone tally. Such as counting the comments and reply comments of the same person as separate opinions.

> You have NOT gone into the ECFS and real ALL the filings

Have you? How do we know you have? Your behavior here indicates you have not, because you missed major points made by various commenters.

So what?

Do you know what he wants in regard to Morse Code testing? What did his comments say, Len?

Or don't you know?

Don't you know?

> >Is there something wrong with Morse Code use?

At last! Something we agree on!

> But NPRM 05-143 is NOT about morse code use. :-)

Sure it is. If the rules changes affect Morse Code use, then the proposal is about Morse Code use.

Eliminating the Morse Code test may reduce Morse Code use.
You'd like that, of course.

OTOH, there are reports that in some countries (Germany, Australia)
Morse Code interest and use have been increasing after the Morse Code test was removed.

Wouldn't that be the ultimate paradox if the end result of eliminating
the
test for Morse Code increased its use by radio amateurs?

What "little morse code sandbox on HF", Len? There are no

And how is that a mistake? What did she say about the Morse Code test - is she for it, against it, or something else?

Besides, you are neither into amateur radio nor desirous of obtaining a license, yet your commenting all over the place.

Do you really think the FCC will ignore the comments filed before the OFFICIAL dates?

And if they do ignore those comments, and only take those from the OFFICIAL comment period, what would the percentages be - by your tally?

Yes. You don't even have a web page, even though AOL gives a free page

Website with a direct link to each comment. So anyone can easily check AH0A's work.
You haven't shown a single case where his classification was unclear or incorrect.

> Long after EVERY OTHER radio service in the USA has dropped

Who cares, Len? Morse code has not been dropped by Amateur radio.
Besides,
you said that "NPRM 05-143 is NOT about morse code use."

So what's your big problem with people promoting its use??

> No, NOT "TICKED," Jimmie.

You sure seem to be. Almost all the time. Grumpy, yelling, flying off

Do you want a merit badge and a pat on the head, Len? Seems like it.

Or maybe what you really want is for people to take your results as fact and not question your methods. Nor point out your mistakes. You get really nasty and upset when somebody points out your mistakes.

Commenters or comments?

Besides, those are from before the OFFICIAL comment period, right?
The ones you're afraid FCC will ignore?

What's the percentage from the OFFICIAL comment period?

Maybe the procode folks knew enough to wait for the notice in the Federal Register.

I'm asking you, Len. In this newsgroup. You're awfully ticked because your bias and procedural errors have been exposed by me.

The why did you count them as if they were?

Which includes me, Len.

How about a vociferous anticode nonamateur who thinks he is "better" than others by virtue of his lack of radiotelegraphy skill?

You mean the one where Steve told the FCC not to pay attention to you?
That was good advice.

Remember that you barely made that deadline, and had to use US mail to do it. So your only commentary on 98-143 wasn't visible for comment by others until after January 15.

Now you're just acting like a complete, perfect, state of the art jackass, Len.

There is nothing in Steve's comments that tries "to strip a citizen's rights guaranteed under our First Amendment of the United States Constitution."

But you do. You opposed letting the owners of real estate

I'm not against change at all, Len - IF that change is for a good reason.

Hans wasn't "suckered" into anything.

His information was dead on accurate.

And you now have the resources with which to finish the job,
Brian...It's just up to you whether you're going to do it or not...

You can do it, which will only serve to verify what I've been

Or you can NOT do it, and then waffle along with all sorts of

How do you see Dave as "projecting"...?!?!

Dave's name has appeared in EVERY Amateur Radio journal (save, perhaps, for "Ham Radio" and "QEX") at one time or an other for the last 10-15 years that I am aware of.

Lennie WILL be a "beginner" as it pertains to Amateur Radio. He may know how the trons flow, but he can't seem to operate a station.

Lennie is a liar. A prolific one and an verbose one.
Unfortunately, many people only hear the loudest squeak, and if scum like Lennie isn't kept in his place, he can get away with his mischief.

Of course not. Lennie will reply with any one of several pat-answers about his rights and his "true intent", then go right on with his open warfare against Amateur Radio.

This argument of "Amateur Radio can't progress while there is a Morse test in place" is a BS argument, and has been for the 30 years that I have been an Amateur.

Need proof?

Go find a copy of November QST, dated 1975, and then tell me
there's not been ANY "progress' since then, Markie.

And I can tell you what ELSE you can find in 1975...My name and callsign.

Lennie's name and callsign.

From http://www.ctitech.com/service/CTIterms.asp:

"2. You may not post or transmit any message which is libelous defamatory or which discloses private or personal matters concerning any person. You may not post or transmit any message, data, image or program which is indecent, obscene or pornographic."

Furthermore, most ISPs don't like you running servers unless you pay business rates for your connection. Are you paying CTI as a business customer, or are you stealing bandwidth from them? I suspect the latter, because you don't even have a dedicated host name and have to use your IP address instead.

Finally, you have that Mac OS X server configured badly. I was able to look at any photos I wanted without joining your BBS, simply by going to the URI "http://12.156.123.39/azbb/" and clicking on the jpegs. Pictures which depict the degradation and torture of young girls undoubtedly fit the definition of "indecent" as used by your ISP, and I don't think that you're so stupid that you don't know it.

Instead, I think that you are seeking any kind of attention you can get, including negative attention. That's why you come here to taunt the regulars; you WANT them to get angry and to pay attention to you.

OMG!!!!!!! Howdy all and Happy Thanksgiving coming up. I know this is an old post (from Oct) and I'll see if I can follow it to current, but just opening messages randomly and saw this sentiment.

Hooray, Jim, for saying that. Exactly. Man, down here in the Dallas area, people are seething (OK, maybe not seething, but they're pretty darned po'ed) about this whole situation. We have people out of work, homeless, distraught, etc., every day all day here. And, when the disaster happens, suddenly compassion must go out.

Not saying the poor folks wrapped up in this tragedy don't deserve compassion. They do. But, what in the world is the deal with this? As I said, people are struggling every day--and it didn't take a disaster to ge them there: they live this every day for whatever reason. News around here shows the evacuees (they didn't want to be called refugees) are thankless, asking for more, and say they DESERVE whatever "we" can get and give for them!!??

PAH!!! I'll tend to myself and they can, too. We've got motel/hotel rooms, apts, homes, etc., with the folks living in them who've been sitting on their royal you-know-whats and, now that FEMA said assistance would end Dec 1--they (the evacuees) have decided that they need to go find work, find new homes, etc. EXCUSE ME??!! Shoulda been out there longer ago than now.

I don't know. It's one huge messed up siteeashun down heeya. And, those of us who were forced (by way of tax dollars) to support the lunacy that's been behind the assistance, are fed up. NO, we DON'T need to support any rebuilding in a hurricane zone. Period. (Although a lot of trade and commerce goes through the port...what about that?)

A pretty good case indeed. Here's the insanity, in my opinion. The cost of things related to this disaster are just gross. Please. I have a brother-in-law who is down in that area doing sub-contract work for FEMA. He is down there with his dad. His dad hasn't had a thing to do YET. Been down there for, I think, around a month--maybe more--at $65.00 a day. The man (the dad) hasn't worked a day in his life for years, and whines about any arguments from his kids to get to work. The son (my brother-in-law's brother) is getting paid somewhere around $3500.00 a month!!

You've surely all heard the rates that are being paid for rooms in cruise ships, motels, hotels, apartments, etc. for these folks to live? Rates those places couldn't make under normal circumstances!! When the folks were over here at the Dallas Convention Ctr., we had an ex-coworker (bless her beautiful, patient heart) who called us one day and wanted all of us to get money together from everyone at her former workplace to BUY PLAYSTAIONS for the kids...and, oh yeah, it would be great if big-screen TVs could be bought so they could "see better." 'SCUSE ME? A) these folks are in a disaster situation and should have had tents provided to them nearer to their home area (we do that in foreign lands...why not here?); B) what happens to these TVs and Playstations at the end of all this?

I wish you all could walk around on the streets of Dallas downtown and ride the public transportation and hear the stories of the $2,000.00 credit cards that were obtained from people that live HERE LOCALLY and simply showed up and got one. AND, the same credit cards being used by some of the evacuees to buy drugs, overpriced designer clothing, purses, CDs, etc. One person was asked why they weren't buying food with it, and "oh, that's being given to us, we don't need to buy food."

It's just gross the way all this has been handled. Stupidity. Absolutely.
I'm going to look at the newsgroup the next few days (vacation...yahoo!) and see what's happening.

What is the TIME and FREQUENCY for the above show?
I ain't heard a good 'radio war fun' since the heydays of the 14.313 net wars. Ham radio needs another 'master clown frequency' where one can tune in and have a good laugh.
This keyclown crap is boring, it's much better listening in belly laugh at them and poke-em-with-a-stick on occasion

I had a neighbor (now thankfully moved away) who's dog used to shi+ in my front yard. Bitch neighbor let it run around loose and said not to worry about the dogcrap as "the rain would wash it away". That gave me some inspriation. I went and put a cap from a spray paint can into the lawn under a bush near where Spot-the-Shi+dog liked to leave a deposit. The cap was 1/4" below ground level so it was not readily visible.
I would fill it late at night so as nobody would notice, dipshits.
For the first few days I added sugar to the water that I filled the cap with and ole Shi+dog would happliy lap it up after he took a dump. Content he was now 'trained' to drink from my cup-of-death, on day #5 I added a nice tablespoon of Prestone to the water and ole Shi+dog lapped it up like it was gold. He came back one more time and that was his last. That dog NEVER shi+ on my lawn again and the bitch who owned shi+dog moved away 3 Months later after she and her boyfriend started fighting. Last I heard he beat the crap out of her someplace a few towns away. I could only hope that my giving (now deceased) shitdog his "final daily drink" aided in that tasty predicament.

Don't get mad......GET EVEN.

That doesn't make sense, Leonard. I'm fine with morse code testing and morse code use and I'm a radio amateur. The fetish is yours.

Yep, when something is simple enough, many folks will opt for it rather than attempting that which is more difficult. Many never go beyond the easiest license despite the limited privileges it offers.

Vic Clark was a silent key before I entered the Foreign Service. I've met lots of notable people while in the Foreign Service--a U.S.
President, his wife, two Secretaries of State, a number of U.S.
Congressmen and Senators, former Finnish President Mauno Koivisto, Forumula 1 driver Mika Salo and even trumpeter Clark Terry among others.
I got to see a number of other people of note--Secretary of State George Schultz, Boris Yeltsin. Your name didn't come up.

been fine people.

As a matter of fact, Leonard, I've been watching HDTV for better than the past two years. Get your enjoyment where you can. For watching TV, you're an insider. For amateur radio, you're an outsider.

I have it, have had it and find that it doesn't preclude me from doing the other things I care to pursue. In the watching television vs.
amateur radio arena, you're 1 for 2.

I worked a few Europeans and some South Americans last night on 160m CW, Len. I did some testing of a 6m FM link to an area 70cm repeater last evening with W8MSD and I squeezed in some HDTV viewing of college football. You do as you can and I'll do as I choose.

Dan has shown his true inner colors numerous times on RRAP, especially Perhaps Dan has, but I'd still prefer his company to Lennie.

Just a pointer, Polymath. The term "ham" radio is not endearing to the vast majority of this ng.

Herb and his band of sociopaths were very entertaining.
Only big problem was when some of Herb's sociopaths took things to real life. Herb was well aware he was recruiting dangerous people into his BARF organization. He regarded them as "useful idiots," who did his dirty work for him.

Yes, it is!

But let's look at the trend:

On May 14, 2000, those two license classes constituted 49.5% of current unexpired US amateur radio licenses held by individuals.

On November 15, 2005, those two license classes constituted 48.0% of current unexpired US amateur radio licenses held by individuals.

The percentage of licenses, as well as the total number of licenses, held by the combined group of Technicians and Technician Pluses has dropped considerably in the past 5-1/2 years.

OTOH:

On May 14, 2000, General class licenses constituted 16.7% of current unexpired US amateur radio licenses held by individuals.

On November 15, 2005, General class licenses constituted 20.4% of current unexpired US amateur radio licenses held by individuals.

On May 14, 2000, Extra class licenses constituted 11.7% of current unexpired US amateur radio licenses held by individuals.

On November 15, 2005, Extra class licenses constituted 16.2% of current unexpired US amateur radio licenses held by individuals.

me. QED ("it is as demonstrated")

>Did Mr. Rightsell single you out for some personal criticism?

No, but you do not understand the procedings of public

it as a form of politics. In politics the "gloves come off" many times and that is acceptible.

I do not have OnStar. I do not need any GPS device.

AAA membership and a cellular telephone serves adequately for long automobile trips. Map services on the Internet (from both AAA and MapQuest) provide detailed driving directions and warnings of highway construction undwerway.
My wife and I recently completed a 5,200 mile trip to the midwest and back. This is the third such long trip we have done in six years. We have driven to Washington state many times (a mere 1,000 miles) as well in those six years.

Whichever one of us is at the wheel during those trips knows to pay primary attention to driving, not playing with hobby radios.

It appears that the individuals alluded to have been roasted, spitted, and grilled overmuch if they complain so readily. :-)

Such avoidance allows you to continue living. Be greatful for that.

expensive Orion transceiver? :-)

>They miss a lot of life.

They do? Ohm my. Do you define "life" as only enjoying what YOU enjoy?

I don't think that's right. Everyone ought to do what THEY like...at least in my mind. You seem to think that is wrong.

What am I "missing?" I have many activities, all of which I have selected based on what I enjoy.

I enjoy some luxuries in life and the freedom of retirement.
I enjoy the relationship I have renewed with my wife (after a long absence since our days together in high school). I enjoy a new car which is not a luxury vehicle and replaces a 1992 model. I enjoy a number of friends both here and around the country, just recently having a reunion with family friends in the midwest plus good companionship with my wife's classmates at their 50th Graduation Reunion.

Nah. You are without flaw...you are an Extra Morseman!

>It isn't just about baby steps (not baby shoes), is it? You don't care >to join an activity where you'd still be considered a beginner, do you?
>I mean, you haven't achieved the neophyte level in amateur radio.

Tsk, tsk, tsk...more arrogant superiority manifest there, Heil.

Amateur radio is basically a HOBBY. It isn't a craft, guild, or union that demands some kind of "apprentice-journeymanmaster" hierarchial order...except in the minds of some olde fahrts who love to talk down to "lesser folk" (the ones THEY think are "lesser").

Am I some kind of "beginner" in radio after a half century of experience in more parts of the EM spectrum than any amateur is allowed? Am I some kind of "beginner" because I've operated transmitters with far higher power outputs than amateurs are allowed to have? Am I some kind of "beginner" because long ago I learned how to design radio circuits from a blank pad with pen on to the finished hardware and gotten them to perform as originally specifed?

You seem to think so. What it really boils down to is manual telegraphy.

I would be an absolute beginner at telegraphy, no dispute, if I were to take that up again. All I know is the pattern of dots and dashes and their corresponding English language characters. That's suffed into a good memory with lots and lots and lots of other data, some useful, some not.

But - and this is very important in the NPRM 05-143 decision - the FCC has ALREADY made ALL ALLOCATED MODES OPTIONAL TO USE.
There just isn't ANY mandate to exclusively use radiotelegraphy except on two small slivers of the lower end of 6m and 2m.
But, getting the amateur license to use ANY amateur band below 30 MHz still requires passing a telegraphy test!

I'm seeking to eliminate that telegraphy test. There's no point in having it except as a vestige of pride still felt by those long-timers who once considered themselves as 'compagnons de telegraphe' because the human-made regulations gave them status-rank-privileges BECAUSE of that telegraphy test. I and thousands upon thousands of others have operated radio transmitters legally and competently at frequencies below 30 MHz without being required to know or use any radio-telegraphy skills. That "plain, simple fact" shows the hypocrisy of the PCTA in demanding the retention of the telegraphy test. That test regulations does NOT serve the public, only the few already-licensed in amateur radio who consider, self-righteously superior through passing a telegraphy test.

Now, if you wish to start some program to teach real beginners in radio the skills of telegraphy, I am not against that. Feel free to use what allocations you've been granted. So far. Beep your little Orion to outer space if you want.

Remember, what YOU consider to be "necessary" is NOT shared by the public, is NOT a physical requirement to operate any RF emitter below 30 MHz. It is just your personal desire. You are not yet a god of anything, are not divine. You are simply inflexible and self-righteous, seeking to retain federally-mandated testing in skills which you passed some time ago.

>What do your former employment, income, home and marital status have to >do with your getting an amateur radio license, Len?

If you wish to make some kind of game out taking words and sentences out of context, then I can beat your game any time for amount that you can count. That's wasted effort and impolite.

>>> You've told us how great things are for you many, many times, Len.
>>> As if all that somehow explains your obsession.
>
>> "Obsession?!?" :-)
>> Trying to change federal law is an "obsession?"
>In your case, yes, it is. You are obsessed.

Incorrect. It is PERSISTENCE. It is IDEALISM, a quest to make things better for others who share some of my interests.
It is many things but it is definitely not some deviant
obsession.

On the other hand, those who have met old test regulations and insist and insist that those should be kept for the future are suspect. Their self-righteousness is suspect.
Their failure to change with a changing reality is suspect.
Their obstinancy on keeping the old ways forever in this new millennium are suspect. Their perceived self-worth is threatened by feared loss of status and privilege, perhaps even rank in the pecking order of the "amateur community."

I've just rounded up the usual suspects and shown some light on them. You complain of the glare in your eyes. Too bad, that makes it hard for you to admire yourself in the mirror.

Apologies to you for that. I may have to change to a more intense light source...

>You can write "YES it IS" all you want. Obtaining an amateur radio >license isn't about those things.

True, the U.S. amateur radio test regulations have nothing about baby shoes or taking little baby steps.

RIGHT NOW the U.S. amateur test regulations require a telegraphy test for any class privileges below 30 MHz.
THAT is what many are trying to change.

NPRM 05-143 is about ELIMINATING that code test. Change for the future, for the public...the public in the Commission's language is ALL OF US, not just the personal desires of the few who have met and passed telegraphy tests.

>>> Then why are you so unfriendly here, Len?

Because both Miccolis and Heil are decidedly unfriendly to all who disagree with them. They will not bend from their self-righteous opinions, offer no real concessions on the code test, act arrogant and superior (Heil becomes abusive) on the subject of radiotelegraphy. They increase all that on replies having opposite opinions. They continue attempts at "pushing buttons" of those opposed to them.

They have sown what they now reap in return.

>That's simply incorrect, Leonard. You insult anyone who favors >retention of morse testing in amateur radio.

Miccolis and Heil both PERCEIVE insults where there is only strong, sharp responses to their overbearing self-images.

This venue is a debate forum, not a gathering around the bar at a local fraternal order. It does not have to be "friendly" in the sense that all "must" think alike, have the same opinions. If you wish "hail fellow well met" gatherings, seek fellowship among your own kind. This venue is open to ALL who are able to access it.

>Please explain how retention of morse testing is regression in any form.
>After all, morse code is used daily by thousands of radio amateurs.

Those radio amateurs - if operating legally - below 30 MHz using radiotelegraphy have ALREADY passed a federal telegraphy test. If they have already passed it, removal of the code test regulation will not affect their operating privileges.

However, the code test retention WILL affect all those uncountable in the future who MAY want to get an amateur radio license having below-30-MHz privileges. They are not invisible, only uncountable because there is no accurate way to get their numbers. At best, the Commission gets only a general impression of their numbers in the filings on Docket 05-235. So far, those numbers of the public against code testing are about even with those for its retention.

>Care to see your special profile, Leonard?

A "profile" by whom? Someone who dislikes me intensely in public? By someone who has no claimed training/schooling in psychology? By someone who is a staunch, stubborn, steadfast pro-code-test-advocate?

Feel free to post any "profile" you wish. I will repeat it for the benefit of all those who might miss one...as I have before. Feel free to make a Big Issue of it. All that does is show what a self-righteous little spiteful sociopath you are in here when your personal opinions are countered.

>You continue to complain that others insult or denigrate you. You've >told Jim that he never had any "PRIDE" in his work.

Yes, I should be taken to task on that, considering that Miccolis has NEVER TOLD ANYONE HERE EXACTLY WHAT HE DOES AT HIS UNNAMED EMPLOYMENT PLACE.

>You go on to call him "Brother of Dudly".

In some ways Miccolis IS like Dudly the Imposter, yielding only vague generalities of what he does/did without giving more specific descriptions. You fit that description in some posts...such as your "being in a country at war" implying that you were somehow personally engaged in warfare...and that later your only description of military experiences of any specific nature involved operating some MARS radios in a "behind the front lines" location. You've then made repeated denigrating statements about my assignment at a "rear area," something that I had no choice but to accept at the time.

>Do you consider your behavior to be rude?

No. It is strong and confrontational...which has been quite normal in computer-modem networks since the original ARPANET spread out into the world. These networks are not for the faint of heart or the easily disturbed one-sided inflexible ideological bigots who refuse to compromise.

NPRM 05-143 is a direct affront to the perception of some in what constitutes "ham radio" or "amateur radio." Some insist that radiotelegraphy is "the heart and soul of ham radio," therefore a test for that skill must "always" be in the regulations. Those are repeated phrases (although not necessarily verbatim) from many of the Comments found in Docket 05-235 written by those in opposition to the NPRM. That is the "world" to them and, should the telegraphy test be eliminated, will result in the END of that "world" to them. Naturally those people will be disturbed, distraught, angry, or outraged at the very idea that their "world" is "threatened." They become surly and resentful in their anxiety and thus perceive that loss of a telegraphy test is a "threat" to them. They also perceive that anyone who is for the elimination of the telegraphy test is, in some way, "unacceptible" to their "world." They can think of only Their "world" and show no consideration of the rest of the public. In their perceptions they have become selfish, self-centered and lose their capability of accepting that others of the public do not share their internal "world" image. They get ANGRY at the public desiring change and try to quash any thought of change. That ANGER manifests itself in attempts to denigrate the person who challenges them. Quite a common syndrome not confined to amateur radio matters but to all human endeavor.

>Are the smileys supposed to excuse your churlish manner?

"Smileys" are just emoticons that represent my mood after having made some statement. In-person, there would be much more in the way of expressed emotion, tone of voice, "body language" and so forth to indicate my mood at any particular time. Given the limitations of allowed character limitations in this particular medium, emoticons are a minimal extension of what would be readily apparent during in-person encounters.

Your use of "churlish" is inappropriate and a bit insulting. "Churl" is a rather old descriptor of "1. a peasant, 2. a surly, ill-bred person; a boor." You wish to place yourself "above" others, to be "their superior." [that is readily apparent in your many previous postings in here] Your general attitude seems to be nothing more than bullying with strong overtones of bravado, a "don't mess with ME" sort of thing. That reveals much to all other readers.

If I use "smileys" [ :-) ] that only indicates I am actually physically smiling on having written something. I rarely use other emoticons, such as a mild frown or disagreement [ :-( ] because I am more amused at the general commentary in here than disapproving. :-)

>Talk about misdirection. You dodged the question, Leonard.

Tsk, tsk. There is NO imperative or mandate that all "must" answer someone's question. You presume too much authority. An infinite amount of presumptions since you are not the moderator in here.

>> We readers will just put you down as either NOT WORKING or >> at some place not associated with electronics at all.
>We readers? You're now speaking for all other readers of this newsgroup?

Not at all. I read ALL postings in this public venue, therefore reiterating that I am one of those readers.

I speak only for myself. For whom do you speak as your "authority?"

>You can't blame Jim for not wanting to talk shop with you. Look what >has happened to others who have revealed details of their work (and who >happen to favor retention of morse testing).

Miccolis has not revealed any details of what he does for a living...other than he is a "professional" and is "proud of his work." Miccolis has expressed a number of varying opinions of alleged knowledge, even expertise in areas where he has not claimed any experience (aerospace, specifically on spacecraft; non-amateur communications where he refused to give anything specific on where or what), yet has been highly confrontational, even antagonistic to those who HAVE had experience. Miccolis has admitted that he has NEVER served in any military postion, yet he chides veterans who have served by claiming expertise in military matters and military life.

Look at Steven James Robeson who has woven a veritable, virtual straw skyscraper of claims in here. He is exposed constantly on his outright fraudulent claims, yet he persists. I have drawn a parallel to his actions in here to the "Dudley" description found in Ernest K. Gann's auotbiographical book "Fate Is The Hunter." That Dudley was an outrageous fraud in commercial aviation and eventually killed himself and his passengers in a crash caused by his incompetence. The "Major Dud" label he got (and deserved) is a play on words, a contraction of my comparison to Gann's presented example with the name contracted...Frank Gilliland applied the "major" both from Robeson's claim of rank of major in the CAP and the former half-hour TV sitcom "Major Dad" about an active-duty USMC officer. Marine veterans, indeed most veterans of any branch with a pride in their military service, are justifiably insulted both personally and as a group at ANY poseur, any fake "veteran" who makes claims of machismo and/or heroism when they have NO PROOF of such claims.

YOU have made numerous denigratory personal insults about my "rear area service" in my military experience, a voluntary enlistment in the Army, a branch that had selective service draftees during a definite war period. If you are a REAL military veteran, then you should know that no one in the military, especially in the enlisted ranks, has much choice of where they are assigned. I went where I was told, did my duties, got promotions because I did my duties competently. That my assignment involved HF radio communications on a large scale was an eye-opening revelation into the much larger world of radio. It was "the luck of the draw" and it resulted in a major life career change for me that I never regretted. That you were resentful of that fortuitous circumstance is not my problem. The ACAN-STARCOM-DCS worldwide net was and remains far larger than any Department of State communications network; the military nets did carry State communications then and both share the DSN now.

Brian Kelly, formerly a regular in here, vacillated on his postings, taking several "sides." While NEVER having served, he boasted of "more important work" for the military than I, negatively criticized what I did as both a military and a civilian person, yet made a number of embarassing faux pas on his knowledge of the military, including the activities of the now-closed NADC in Pennsylvania. He might have changed his mind on NPRM 05-143, maybe not. He has stopped posting in here.

Hans Brakob, a proud morseman and USN veteran, a Master Chief Petty Officer, has gone on the record as favoring the elimination of the U.S. amateur radio code test. I respect his military service and I think he respects mine. My only "disagreement" with Hans is his penchant for posting/forwarding so many stories/tales on USN life, some of them of quite an emotional nature. While the USN and the entire maritime world enthusiastically boosted the use of early radio a century ago, there is a sense of overkill in boosting morsemanship from an emotional, visceral level a century later...especially given the enormous improvements in all radio techniques and technologies during that century.

Brian Burke is a USAF veteran and I do not discredit his service nor insult his active-duty assignments. Robeson does that for no reason. Brian is a meteorologist, not one directly involved in the worldwide USAF radio network, but he is conversant and knowledgeable about military radio procedures on land. Burke favors the elimination of the U.S. amateur radio license exam code test and is a code-tested radio amateur licensee.

Frank Gilliland is a USMC veteran and works IN radio, does not have an amateur radio license yet takes the side against the NPRM. That's fine with me. Frank does not insult me yet we have had some mild disagreements in here. Frank is frank and believable. His postings have an air of honesty. Frank takes no guff from Dudly and speaks up on Dudly's fakery, misuse of what is known jargon in the Corps, and Dudly's general weird attitude.

>You make up derogatory
>names for those folks and you insult their jobs and military service.

I WILL endeavor to insult, demean, and generally despise ANY military veteran FAKE that exists or shows up. That is a PROMISE.

I WILL endeavor to insult, demean, and generally despise
anyone who attempts the same sort of insults, denigrations, and personal insults on ME. They get back what they hurl.

I have digitized records of proof of my military service, my civilian jobs, personal references (both mentioned in here in specifics plus those not yet mentioned), plus some additional verification documents from government agencies on my ordinary life. While not an exceptional life, it exists, has existed, and was real. Anyone who challenges that, in any way, shape, or form had damn
well be able to PROVE their charges beyond any doubt.
If they cannot prove what they charge, they will get much worse than they try to give.

In my life experience I've encountered a number of "churlish" bullies who've attempted many things against me, including physical violence. I learned to stand up to them, face them down, and, in a few cases, had to physically defeat them when they were not able to control themselves. I'm not looking for trouble but if trouble finds me, then woe is that trouble; such will not find an easy adversary.

>Gee, Lennie, you are constantly AGAINST the retention of morse code
>testing in amateur radio. Imagine that.

TS.

>...and, poor baby, you still wonder why you are insulted and denigrated?

Up yours.

You can continue to maintain the code test on your purely personal level of your targeted insults to me specifically.
You have received responses. You apparently don't like being countered on the personal level. Your problem. If I have the time you will get replies as I choose.

Since you started this thread with an overt personal insult as the title, you are in no position to claim yourself either "civil" in this war of words or as the "neutral judge" of What Should Be. You are neither "neutral" nor "judge."

Or, it could shift to the broader perspective of actually talking regulation policy and arguing on that plane. If you choose to resort to the personal level again, you are the one to have failed in the shift. You get NO points for already being IN amateur radio through licensing since the code test regulations affect only those who are either not in amateur radio or those inside who wish to "upgrade." You are in neither category. You are not in the FCC nor do you control any licensing regulations. You have no qualifications that make you "superior" for arguing policy on the public level, can only resort to puerile personal insults. QED.

Tsk, tsk, tsk. NO "holes," Heil. An abbreviated synopsis is all.

Before Restructuring took effect in 2000, the Extra code test rate was 20 WPM. Why? Because the older-timers influencing the NAAR lobbyists thought they were hot snit for amateur radio because so many had been professional telegraphers.
It was a way of keeping the old pro status past retirement.
Since they were already skilled in telegraphy, they got a free
set of perquisites in a HOBBY activity.

Heil, quit being the snotty lil kid trying to turn tables. That makes YOU look dumb. I took all the test elements for a First 'Phone 49 years ago. I've seen the test elements for an Extra of that time. The Commercial license was still more difficult than the amateur...NOT because I took any, but because the Commercial license covered a LOT more EM territory, a LOT more modes in Commercial radio then.

That's NOT an "answer," Heil. You can't throw your prunes and say they are apples with that sort of response.

The statement still holds. In order to get an Extra ham grant, every applicant has to pass BOTH the telegraphy and written tests. That's in the regulations, not in your stupid little s l o w w o r d s .

Tsk, tsk, tsk...you do that very thing, Heil. :-)

Naturally YOU will object. You consider yourself SUPERIOR

Then make your complaints known to the FCC. Litigate in civil

All the readers here KNOW you are "on my case" constantly, have been since you tried that Guinea-Bisseau "embassy" thing years

Tsk. You are attempting the arrogant superior attitude again.
"You look petty" kind of puerile remark. :-)

I don't need to "squirm." I don't need Preparation H. All my piles are on the other side of the screen, thankfully. :-)

>Hmmmmm. Don't you fit right into that particular category, Len?

Obviously NOT, Heil. I've been a hobbyist in radio-electronics since 1947, a professional in radio since HF communications beginning in 1953, a holder of a top Commercial license since 1956 as well as broadcasting work in 1956. From the end of 1956 I've been in electronics-radio of the aerospace industry.
I've been in partnership in a small business that required a commercial radio station license. I've considered getting an amateur license for FUN (writing it all-caps to emphasize it). I've never considered 'CW' as "fun" and never considered any time-wasting effort to learn telegraphy cognition.

I've not taught English at any college or university. In my bachelor days I dated an English instructor of a college...which as nothing to do with the instructor who did the comment used by Speroni as being "for 'CW'" and claimed NO INTEREST and NO EXPERIENCE in radio.

There were 18 other filings in WT Docket 05-235 that were all from LAW STUDENTS, none of whom had claimed any experience in any radio transmission nor any interests in obtain an amateur radio license. What did Speroni make of those? He doesn't explain that. The Comment from "the English Department" is on his pretty chart at the top showing some kind of agreement that

'CW' testing should be.

As of 19 November 2005, there have been 3,786 total filings on WT Docket 05-235. Regardless of using "valid" licenses or total license grants in U.S. amateur radio, that number (nearly twice those of 98-143) is still LESS than 1% of the total licenses. If you want to claim some kind of "victory through a majority" in Speroni's counting/interpreting, feel free. That only shows you are as biased as Speroni.

>> Tsk, tsk, tsk, "Judge of the Superior Court" and Sister Nun

>Somebody has to do it, Len. You foul up more words and definitions than >quite a number of posters who've never done any editing or who've not

Tsk, tsk, tsk...you are just being your (normal) uncivil self there, Heil. All you really want to do is be "on my case" in here because you want to CONTROL who posts what. You want a moderated newsgroup of such a condition that it is merely some kind of auxiliary ARRL where all the radiotelegraphers are given top privileges.

Heil, I've sold enough work through my work (without meeting editors face-to-face) to warrent them paying me for my work.
Done that for several years. No problems. Where references were needed and known available for facts, those were listed.
Where references were needed but not easily available, I've included copies for the Editors in Chief. I've had no nasty notes from any of them on that. IF and only IF there were some spelling errors or grammatical errors (actually none that I recall), then those were due to the typesetters and found on the proof sheets...I found them and notified staff along with marks on proof sheets. Where changes occured between manuscripts and proofs were due to printing space considerations, something that occurs regularly, the editors informing authors of that with requests to check the text cutting and communicate back any needed corrections.

I get ZERO compensation for writing anything in here...except maybe a visceral enjoyment out of puncturing the balloons of the mythmakers and the ego-inflated "superior" beings. It is fun to see the totally-biased, self-opinionated get skewered and hear their anguish over non-physical "wounds" when trying to keep federal regulations to Their Ideas of What Must Be.

You've been punctured and wounded many times in here, Heil.
I can't help that. As Super Chicken was told, "you knew the job was dangerous when you took it." You just can't continue to BULLY folks around as you have and not expect someone to stand up to you and kick your verbal butt for the way you act to those against your opinions. If you want to remain deep fat fried and get overcooked, you have only yourself to blame. I enjoy cooking.

Bon apetit y'all.

I fixed that problem with the server. secondly I don't get enough traffic to worry about that. and finally for something to be obscene it must pass the three prong test as the supreme court stated in Miller v California. Finally, "You may not post or transmit any message, data, image or program which is indecent, obscene or pornographic." if that's the cast
I know a LOT of their customers (including people who work for city) who email each other pornographic material through email and that would also be a violation of TOS. If you go to ANY internet service provider they have they same shit in their TOS. I can see the headlines in the newspaper CTITECH shuts down Anime Site, that wounldn't look good in the local paper, including a lawsuit that might follow.

Hello, Steve

Yep, tongue way way into cheek LOL :)) Especially when I say "or something like that" ...
BTW, double sideband with a 90 shifted full carrier yields phase modulation.
I would almost suspect that might be legal under the "regulation by bandwidth", but am not sure. Currently, only in the high end of 10 meters and above (along with standard FM). Something like 29 to 29.7 MHz.
Somewhere around there. At this point, I'd mention that if I were to fire up FM on 10 meters, I'd sure as heck break out the rules as I am not exactly sure where it is permitted on 10 or the exact frequency of the FM repeaters on 10. Ya can't know everything; as long as you can look it up, you'll be fine ;)

Steve, you're blowing it. I prefer to keep my name and callsign off of Pipe dreams. Your ISP can cancel any account which it thinks violates its TOS. It isn't subject to due process restrictions because it owns the servers, and it can pretty much do what it wants with those servers, including kicking you off.

To believe otherwise is to be ridiculous.

Bullshit, in Verizon V. RIAA the federal courts stated that a service provider didn't have any control of a users computer, and that a service provider is nothing more then a conduit. The Anime Website is NOT on their computers, and it is nothing more then a conduit. Like I said I know a LOT of people in this town that uses their service to send porn via email, including some in city govenment and state. As for Due Process restriction, Miller had nothing to do with due process, the courts ruled that for something to be consider Obscene it has to pass a three prong testwhich are:

Whether the average person, applying contemporary community standards, would find that the work, taken as a whole, appeals to the prurient interest,

Whether the work depicts/describes, in a patently offensive way, sexual conduct specifically defined by applicable state law,

Whether the work, taken as a whole, lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value.

The work is considered obscene only if all three conditions are satisfied. BTW, the Majority of ISP use the Miller Test as a reference when it comes to determining "obscene material" and those that don't should because they could get into a serious First Amendment Issue. This isn't a porn site, this is an Anime site a very BIGGGGGG difference between that an porno site. if you don't like what's on that site don't go to it. The site was created for people who like anime, NOT some licensed amateur operator who wants to censor the internet. The courts has also ruled not to many years ago that adult speech can't be infringed upon, including the ISP. Like I said this is a Anime site directed to people who like Anime, if you don't like don't go there.

No you didn't fix that problem. You added a file named "index.html," but that isn't a real fix, because there are ways to list your directory structure anyway. For example, the URI http://12.156.123.39/azbb/azbb_center/ still gives a nice list of your bbs internals, including the names of bbs members, to someone who knows how to feed the php scripts the correct arguments while calling them.

Your bbs is miserably protected. You need to learn more about Apache/2.0.54 and its "Options Indexes" configuration directive.
After that, you need to learn about mod_rewrite and how to protect yourself from hostile browsers by placing rewrite directives in an htaccess file.

While I wouldn't do it, I can tell you in all seriousness that anyone could "own" your Apache server very easily and deface much of your web site's contents.

You are at high risk of both script kiddie and rogue nurse attacks.

How?

Is that a threat? You seem to be saying that Dave would be in some sort of danger if he were to meet you.

What danger would that be, Len?

In some kinds of radio, you are a beginner, Len.

Yes - because you didn't "operate" those transmitters in the legal sense of the word.

Yet when a simple design problem was posed to you here,

That's one thing you're a beginner at, Len. There's lots more.

"suffed"?

Seems to me that beginner status is what really bothers you.

Always been that way, Len.

In fact, an amateur license does not have to be used at all. In many services, if a license is not used, it is revoked by FCC.

That's a real load of bull, Len.

One point in having the test is that Morse Code is a big part of today's amateur radio.

But not as radio amateurs. You were a transmitter technician in the Army and a cber. Sorry, that experience does not qualify you to operate an amateur radio station. FCC agrees.

"The public" was invited to comment on this very issue. And the majority (55%) of those who bothered to comment say that at least some Morse Code testing is necessary for an amateur radio license of at least Extra class.

Neither is a written test, Len. Millions of people have used HF transmitters without passing any test, you know.

Most of the public who bothered to comment do not agree with complete code test elimination, Len.

Well, that's not true of me, anyway.

K2UNK and I disagree mightily on many things, including the Morse Code test. Yet we are friendly. Same is true of myself and K0HB. And many others.

In fact, Len, it seems that you are the unfriendly one.

You mean LICENSED amateur radio...as in having an HF transceiver and "working DX on HF with CW." :-)

>I made no excuses and you weren't involved in my work any more than you >are involved in amateur radio.

"Not involved with your [Department of State] work?" Not in the 1980s. I was involved in the 1950s. "State" had their own TTY nodes in the ACAN-STARCOM-DCS worldwide in the 1950s and 1960s. Would you like to know the node letters found on all messages that were relayed by the Army? I have a nice list. There's also one at the USAER website which covers Army in Europe history extensively.

"State" never used an RCA Corporation RACES (Random Access Card Extract System) archival memory storage machine? On the contrary, "State" had two of them in Washingdon DC as prime electronic back-up. Back in the late 1960s. I know because I worked at the RCA division that made them and I got in on some of their final testing. Department of State used those to keep track of a months' worth of messages into/out of DC. You told me they were of no consequence. :-)

I'm not involved in the operation of LICENSED amateur radio on-the-air. I can and have helped other amateurs fix/align their radio equipment. However, you want to dismiss a great big hobby area involving not just radio but all of electronics in the United States. Unpaid work. In a hobby. That's were I am.

> In other words, you're a non-factor in either.

Tsk, tsk, I'm closer to a Mersene number insofar as factors are concerned! <BSEG>

>You've been recycling here too. You've certainly gotten mileage out of >your irrelevant military experiences of better than half a century ago.

1. The U.S. military gave up using morse code modes for long-haul HF communications in 1948, longer than a half century ago. Plain, simple fact. Bugs the hell out of devout Believers in the Church of St. Hiram, so I bring it up. :-)

2. I've mentioned a considerable amount of civilian programs I've worked on in the last 49 years.
Interestingly, there's more "sensitivity" on that than on old military activities due to Trade Secrets, Corporate Confidential, and general Non-Disclosure demands. Unless I have press release or other public information on that, I don't even mention them.

3. Before the advent of communications satellites, wideband fiber optic cable, improved underwater cable, the U.S. military depended primarily on HF radio for their worldwide communications networks.
That HF network equipment operated by the very same laws of physics which governed amateur radio then and now. Technology transfer was directly applicable between the military of that time and amateur radio of that time. However, military radio then (and still does) employ more modes and techniques than are allowed by U.S.radio amateurs now.

Such as long-time amateur radiotelegraphers who've never ventured behind the front panels of their radios in order to understand how they worked. :-) Yes, I am familiar with those. Their "radio skill" never goes beyond their key, their ears, or the "official" jargon they've picked up from older days, those used by older "radio experts."

>George Schultz, Boris Yeltsin.

Wow! All because you worked for the Department of State?

Who wrote "I've met people like you, always bragging about..."

What has all that name-dropping to do with amateur radio? :-)

Hmmm...I could do the same schtick with some show business folks, some high up, some not well known, lots of behind the scenes guild people, plus a couple of big corporation founders, three federal representatives (Barry Goldwater's son, once on politics, the other on a visit to RCA EASD in Van Nuys about the time his district was gerrymandered out of my area). I was quite taken with meeting Stockard Channing briefly during a party in the Hollywood Hills, she is tinier in real life than in reel life and is charming without needing a script. [Stockard was in "West Wing"
as a semi-regular, is now on another show about doctors]

I've not met any Heads of State. Few get involved in the nittygritty of aerospace. Representative Goldwater did but then he was bigger on flying and piloting than his father. The late General Bernard Shriever, USAF Missle Command (or whatever its final name was) attended a briefing I gave and we had a chat afterwards. Impressed me as having the "right stuff." John Young and Bob Crippen were at Rocketdyne, meeting and greeting the folks there who made the Space Shuttle Main Engines (shuttle space-frame was made "over the hill" at the B-1 Division). That right after the first space flight of the STS; they also were the crew of the air-drop-only Enterprise test shuttle.

On alliterations you seem illiterate.

There was no human parade march on Washington in regards to amateur radio. There were (to date) 3,786 filings on WT Docket 05-235, that Docket devoted to only one subject, the elimination or retention of the morse code test in federal amateur radio regulations. It's been only four months since the release of NPRM 05-143 (on July 19, 2005) but in the 11 month official period of WT Docket 98-143 on Restructuring, that garnered only about 2200 filings.

In the NAAR, if he is a member there. The Commission doesn't have "voting" or "membership" through license granting...it just grants licenses and regulates all civil radio in the United States. The NAAR (old name ARRL, but NAAR seems to be the new name used by Imlay in Comments) membership is only 1 in 5 of all United States amateur radio licenses.

You DO have such difficulty with the written word, don't you? Tsk, tsk. Work on comprehension rather that strict, obedient literalism. This isn't an English Composition high school class.

Ever hear of Phil Amidon? He retired from NBC West Coast business selling iron powder toroid cores and other little kits on sale in many radio-electronics parts stores nationwide. Bigger corporation bought his company.

Yep, extreme literalism. "Back of the bus" kind of bigotry.

Were you born with that elitist attitude? Or was it acquired in "the foreign service?" :-)

Tell me, do you hang around VE exam sessions, questioning those who enter the door whether they are "upgrading" or are newbies? Do you act like a Dill sergeant with the newbies? Chew them out, don't permit them to speak until spoken to? I get the distinct feeling you do that. :-)

By the way, I've actually been watching HDTV, the present system in the regulations, since SIX years ago. Since a demonstration by the "Grand Alliance" group on the west coast. I've seen "HD" systems demonstrated much earlier, but those were not picked up in the FCC regulations.

Vaudeville isn't "dead," Godfather. It isn't healthy but

Vaudeville is alive and well but musclebound in the World

Incorrect. I have several FIRST CLASS Radiotelephone (Commercial) license certificates. Want to see them? :-)

I don't think you have the story. If you had it, I doubt that you could recount it honestly. Your tale is still full of holes.

That's incorrect, Leonard. The Extra Class ticket was available before Incentive Licensing. At that time, it offered no additional privileges at all. It was never available for just passing a higher speed morse exam. Your story is still full of holes.

I took all the test elements for the Amateur Extra in 1977. I saw the test elements for the First Phone of that time. I disagree with your statement. After all, does not all radio operate under the same physics.

Like Jim, I've also known Extra Class Amateur ticket holders who also passed the First Phone. I've had some tell me that the Extra was tougher. I've had others tell me that they were comparable. After all, obtaining a First Phone wasn't rocket science.

It was most assuredly an answer. Passing a f i v e w o r d p e r m i n u t e morse exam is not at all like passing a 20 wpm exam.
The 5 wpm test is the same as the one which was given to Novice Class examinees. It is slow enough that one could pass by counting dits and dahs.

Of course it still holds. The test is just much, much easier to pass.
Unlike your original statement, one does not obtain an Extra Class ticket simply by passing a morse exam.

obtaining a license.

There has been a code-free amateur license available to you since 1991.
You have not even attempted to pass an exam for that license. Your most recent statement here claims that you do not desire an amateur radio license. Would you like to see it?

> I've not taught English at any college or university. In my

I can tell that you haven't taught English. If you had, you'd have noted the obvious discrepancy in what you originally wrote about the English teacher (above), "who said out-right in her Comment that she is neither into amateur radio nor desirous of obtaining a license". Now you've changed it to "claimed no INTEREST and NO EXPERIENCE in radio".
The two statements are very, very different. You're squirming.

Yeah? You aren't involved and you are against morse testing. So?
Looks like you've encountered a dilemma.

So? You don't have an amateur radio license. What percentage of non-licensees in the amateur radio service made comments or replies?
It'd be a helluva lot smaller than the percentage of licensees who commented. What's your point?

> If you want to claim some kind of "victory equipment simultaneously. I've not had a chargeable accident in years

Why does that matter, Len? What difference does my job make to what you describe as "hobby radio"?

Your behavior here has demonstrated that it doesn't matter what someone's job involves. If that person disagrees with you, their employment is ridiculed and denigrated by you.

See above. Only a fool would give you more information when your previous behavior shows what you will do with that information.

Yeah, well, different strokes for different folks.

Well, Len, you've never been a radio amateur, and have no real experience with radiotelegraphy, yet you are "highly confrontational, even antagonistic to those who HAVE had experience."

More important, you find it necessary to attack me personally, rather than deal with facts.

Where have I claimed "expertise" in anything, Len? If you think my postings are those of an expert, that's your opinion, not anything I posted.

Whoa! "there is a sense of overkill in boosting morsemanship from an emotional, visceral level a century later."

What the heck is that supposed to mean - that Hans isn't even supposed to like Morse Code?

You'll also do the same to those who simply disagree with you,

your ideas or information to be a personal insult.

2042. Glenn Baxter and Intimate Male Massage

The other day I was driving on the interstate south of Augusta, in Maine. I had to take a crap, so I pulled into the first decent looking rest room. I ran into the stall, sat down, and what did I see? Glenn Baxter's name, phone number and email address, scrawled in crayon on the wall. Glenn Baxter, k1man14275@aol.com, 207-495-2215. And right underneath, a message saying, "Expert at intimate favors to men and little boys." For a minute I wondered what kind of grafitti artist would refer to your standard B J or rim job as intimate favors, then I got pretty angry.

This is America damn it! Glenn Baxter from Belgrade Lakes Maine may be the biggest homo on the planet, and people say he diddles littles boys. People say he's a liar, a thief, a con man, a no good qrming mama's boy who barely squeaked through high school. People say a lot of things about Glenn Baxter.

I don't know if any of it's true. But I do know this. If Baxter is a pedophile, or any of the hundred bad things so many people are saying about him, it's nobody's business but his!

If he's no better than a thief and a common criminal, let the police arrest him. If he's into deliberate interference and breaking FCC rules, let the FCC deal with him. Why do so many people have to belittle him and call him a fool, a liar, a charlatan? Whatever happened to the American habit of rooting for the little guy? He's pretty short you know! Have YOU ever met him?

I digress. What I'm saying is this. If you have personal knowledge that Glenn Baxter is a criminal, by all means, call the police, or whoever is in charge of the particular crime you think he committed. But don't get on the internet and call Glenn Baxter a filthy, stinking, pedophilic piece of dog excrement. It's not nice. And it may not even be true, despite EVERYTHING you've heard.

Give Glenn Baxter a break people. Call him and tell him you support his right to call decent people Nazis. Tell him you support his right to fight with Walter Cronkite, Riley, Leo Meyerson, Collins, QRZ, or whoever he's suing this week.

All I'm saying is; the weak-minded, feeble, foolish, and insane need love too!

This has been another editorial minute. Until next time, I'm Johnny Johnston.

Yes I do in the form of Volume 5 of the Title 47 Code of Federal Regulations. In part 97 it definitely required all Amateur Extras to pass a TWENTY word per minute code test.

No holes according to a very OFFICIAL Volume of Title 47 printed by the U.S. Government Printing Office and sold through their branch stores 8 years ago. Allocations per class showed that Extras got lotsa perquisites.

Wanna argue with U.S. government agencies? Go ahead. I ain't them. Call up Dubya and let him know about those "holes."
Maybe Rove and Libby can fill them...?

Tsk, you two are becoming indistinguishable. :-)

I took the 1956 Commercial First Phone test and passed. I saw a 1957 Extra test and it wasn't as difficult at the First Phone.

Now some reel expert gooroos say that ham license tests are now "dumbed down." Bayoo Broose he say dat many times. Many others do.

You disagree with ANY statement I make, senior.

BWAAAAHAHAHAHAHAHHAAHAHA!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

In 20 years there is room for change.

>After all, does not all radio operate under the same physics.

Absolutely. But...the REGULATIONS, you know, the ones made by humans in federal agencies, do NOT AFFECT electrons, fields, and waves.

If the regulations are "equal" then the government would be prudent (or under pressure) to have only ONE test instead of two.

>After all, obtaining a First Phone wasn't rocket science.

Tsk, I've never said that. However, I did work at a place where REAL ROCKET SCIENCE was used in practice, out in Canoga Park, CA, at Rocketdyne Division of Rockwell International. [Boeing bought that division from Rockwell and Rockwell owns Collins Radio... :-) ]

Why don't Heil/Miccolis tell us all about "rocket science?"

So, you almost concede that I was right...there are TWO parts of the Extra exam: Manual telegraphy and written. In order to obtain an Extra class license grant one must pass BOTH.

I was right but you can't get up the courage to say I was.

>My slow words were much bigger than the fast words.

When it comes to ALL radio, you are definitely NOT.

When it comes to sociopathy, you are superior to me in that.

Do you want to go nyah-nyah on ALL licenses?!?

BWAAAAAAAHAHAHAHAHAHA!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

>I passed all the exams which were available. You did not.

I passed all the exams (in one sitting) for a First Phone.
If I had not, the FCC would not have granted me that license.

>I have 42 years of experience as a radio amateur. You do not.

Ech. I have 52 years of experience in PROFESSIONAL radio.

If you want to play "Twenty Questions," go get the game from Parker Brothers. Tell them you've had 42 years of experience as a radio amateur.

Sorry, but I have. :-)

>It isn't obvious at all. You are neither in amateur radio nor

Tsk, I have three essential licenses in life...plus that First Phone which was much later converted to a General Radiotelephone. [that makes four, you don't need the fingers on your other hand to count]

If I want to add an amateur radio license at some later time, I will. I may not want to later. That is MY choice. [that makes five but the amateur license is not what I would call essential to life existance]

>> I've been a hobbyist in radio-electronics since 1947...

>That isn't amateur radio.

YES, it IS. You fail to note "licensed" as a prefix to your use of "amateur radio."

>There has been a code-free amateur license available to you since 1991.

No kidding? FCC 90-53 was made into an R&O!

Sunnuvagun!

>You have not even attempted to pass an exam for that license.

True enough...but you SHOULD say that I never made any appointment with either the FCC or the VEC to take any amateur radio test of any class.

I have the option to do so or not to do so. The Internet does not require any amateur radio license. Only control-freak bigots like yourself require amateur licenses to participate.

Speaking of that, Mr. Control-freak, why aren't you on the case of all those anony-mousies who have polluted this newsgroup and made foul stenches for the last year?

What have you accomplished THERE in your self-righteous attitude of "ethnic purity" in this newsgroup?

semantics, word structure, etc., etc.!!!

You cannot comment on the GIST of the Comment by that female but you wish to go to word-war over my choice of English in rewriting something?!? That is truly pathetic and weak.

YOU show ME your English teaching credentials in order to be the "judge" of proper language.

YOU show ME where you've spent time as an Editor at any publication where language skills are a must. I've done that YOU have NOT.

YOU show ME all the articles you've sold, sight-unseen to editors since 1969.

"Dave Dilemma," control-freak. It has a name! :-)

There's been one recently. I made a Reply to Comments supporting him and adding to what he said. Go look it up. To make it easy on you, old grouchy man of no mountain, you will not have to look back far on WT Docket 05-235.

>I've made no attempt at controlling your posting, Len.

Untrue. Constant heckling of any NCTA that you do is a form of control.

It is a rather weak control and yours just doesn't work.

Now what are you going to do?

Repeating the same tired, trite personal insults against others is a FAILURE. Don't you realize that?

A cartoon character. On TV and with some cinema as short subjects.

You probably didn't see that cartoon series in all those "different countries." :-)

Tsk, you've not taken enough time to ENJOY things... :-)

Of course, being such a "comic," you might be annoyed by other comedy. <shrug>

No doubt you draw a blank on "Snidely Whiplash," "Tom Slick (and the Thunderbolt Grease-slapper)", "Gertie Growler," "Boris and Natasha," "Fearless Leader," "Way-Back Machine", many others. Funny stuff. Hanna-Barbera did well.

But, I digress. This is supposed to be "all about amateur radio!" That's why we readers are all treated to talks on Dudly's "USMC career facts" (not), "Foreign Service" exploits, national politics, international politics, religions, morals and ethics in daily/national life, and a host of other things having nothing to do with RADIO.

Let's all get uptight and rigid on radiotelegraphy to satisfy all the self-important morsemen in here!

Hooo-RAAWWWWW!!

Temper fry.

W4ASX RESPONSE TIME, 11/18/2005 to K1MAN Essay ES051115

Open minded, I look for the wisdom, despite the nonsense that preceeded it. In this case, Glenn, rambling masquerading as wisdom is what I read. You'd do well to figure out what you're trying to say before you say it. Readers want to see a topical sentence, not stream of conscience writing. When the writing goes on and on without materiality, then we conclude the writer is over impressed with himself, writers who are generally poor listeners and readers. Such people have difficulty perceiving reality.

I'm afraid, Glenn, that's where you fall in. Many of your statements/conclusions are rife with fallacy, i.e. the fact that someone fails to answer a CW call means he doesn't know the code. A ham for 53 years, I do not answer code because I want to talk sideband. So, by your logic, you question whether I ever knew the code on account of ignoring a cw signal.

And this bit about law. God, Glenn, get a grip. Law is so deep and intoxicating that even the most educated lawyer wouldn't make the claims you do. Only someone who doesn't know what he doesn't know would talk about law the way you do. Being honest, I know of one exception: The jury trial you won against the law professor. Now, that was a case you can be proud of, one you thought about and prepared for. For the most part, however, you're way behind me in law, and I don't fancy myself anything in law. I mean, consider what I don't know: proof of facts, evidence, hearsay exceptions, theories of damages. That's just within in the ambit of what comes immediately to mind; imagine the big iceberg of law under the sea that isn't readily visible.

At least when I write about you, I write on the basis of facts. For example, when I alleged you were a narcissist, I drew directly from your Wife, Bonny. Fact is, you don't know anything about Brian. I can tell you that Brian is one hell of a genius in psychology, rendering my psychological musings child's play.

You are certainly right when you say he sets up institutes and pseudonyms, but don't many of us? My company is called Entertainment Central, a registered dba of my person here in Florida. Don't you have IARN and AARU? I've always thought that the way we Americans market our material is through all kinds of names that are not necessarily our own. In your mind, however, something is wrong when Brian employs traditional Americana.

Glenn, again I reiterate at one point you were on the way up, but you took a wrong turn. You are no great thinker, no great lawyer, a poor writer, a poor communicator, a very, very poor ham, and a mentally disordered individual, growing worse. Take stock of yourself, my friend, and turn it around.

Bob Sherin,
W4ASX

P.S. If you send me material, please publish any response with the same prominence as the original material. Thanks.

You are right about two things, Bob: 1) I don't know anything about Brian Crow, K3VR, and 2) Your iceberg analogy is a very goog one, but, as an engineer, I do understand the scientific reasons why 9/10 of an iceberg remains unseen under the water. I also understand the basic principles that support the other 9/10 of the law, as you correctly state that I do not know. I don't, of course.

Likewise, Bob, you don't know about 9/10 of my legal work or 9/10 of my other work either. This, at best, will have to wait until all of my books are finished and published at www.K1MAN.com as well as in "Scientific American," etc.

My biggest legal case to date, by far, is currently pending in a Maine Superior Court.

Thanks for reading my essay. It was great to hear from you after so many years. God bless you! 73 and GL de K1MAN.

"Great causes are never tried on the merits; but the cause is reduced to particulars to suit the size of the partisans, and the contention is ever hottest on minor matters." - Ralph Waldo Emerson - From his essay "Nature" 1844.

W4ASX Replies, November 21, 2005

What a lame response, Glenn. God, I could tell you that my biggest case is right now, and it will go down in legal history. That it very well. But this doesn't address the level of my legal knowledge nor countless cases of others that are likely more important than mine and better advocated.

What I get from you Glenn is this notion of entitlement, that only other special people can understand you. I may not know 9/10ths of your law any more than you know 9/10ths of mine. However, I do know what I read as public record, and far from good lawyering, it is pitiful, in my view. I see the way you comport yourself as highly disordered.

Let me give you some examples. You take civil matters and put them in the criminal arena. Where do you think you're going to get with all your felony affidavit complaints and those green cards? By making those matters criminal, do you think the U.S. Attorney is going to pursue them? To the contrary, everyone with whom I communicate in privity thinks you're nuts.

A good part of law is in the chosen remedy. Consider: If you have a complaint against a ham interfering with your broadcast, pursue the traditional civil route. Get an injunction. Given good cause, it's a piece of cake and you could join the FCC as an indispensable party (to interpleed).

Your remedy with Riley is the epitome of what not to do from perspectives too numerous to enumerate. If you sincerely believe all the things you allege in the public forum, why not frame it in a 42 USC 1983 federal action, which, designed for the purpose, has teeth? Of course, you're not going to get anywhere unless you learn how to plead, your weakest part (of which I was aware). For, if your pleading doesn't pass muster, the case will go nowhere, like all of your cases, except the Corson one.

Now, permit me to enlighten you about that 9/10ths iceberg of law underneath. It is not governed by engineering formulas. In this case, it is the sheer intoxication that no matter how far you go in law on any given subject, the library is still replete with more. And every subject can be attacked from so many different angles. Far from governed by formulas, it is governed by education: Smart legal people have a notion of what they don't know.

Your very manner of expression about law, Glenn, is arrogant and pompous. What successful advocate would call an FCC NAL with prima facia efficacy puny and anemic? If that is your idea of Soloman's law, you need more than legal help.

Every would-be author wants to be published. The more respected the publication, the better the author looks. So, apparently you have some massive need to tell me to watch for you in Scientific American. Need I tell you to watch for my best seller "Death of a River Pilot?" While I have high hopes, I don't know for sure that it will be a best seller -- or even published, for that matter. Only time will tell. But you've got this need to hype yourself in the present for something that may happen in the future. Has seasonal depression got you down? (I know that Maine isn't the brightest spot at this time of year.)

In the 1950s, I elmered Aaron Fishman, K1BAF, and in recent years he was in fact published in Scientific American regarding the history of sun spot cycles. Not one to promote himself, Aaron just one day sent me the article, whereupon I marvelled at his achievement. He wasn't aware of what an honor it was. Now Aaron is a mensch, not a pompous ass, as, quite honestly, you come off.

Like your stream of consciousness musings, your reply is stilted. Memoirs. Anyone who has a life worth studying can write a memoir, but, from what I know, yours isn't worth reading, and neither is mine. You're far more likely to wind up a classic case study in DSM.

Please pardon me for expressing the thoughts stirring within. Obviously, if you are enamored with marching to the beat of your own, off-beat drummer, proceed! Be assured that I will evaluate any of your prospective writings unprejudiced and with an open heart. To be honest, I like communicating compliments but have the opposite animus based upon the totality of your utterances in the public domain.

That's funny. I could have sworn that I just wrote that I had.

They certainly might try.

I wouldn't really get goose bumps over threats made by an unpleasant geezer, Len, especially one nearly three thousand miles away.

"Foreign Service"

I don't recall making any issue of my home. I don't recall expounding on the expense of my antenna system. I don't think I've ever used the word "expensive" in describing my radio equipment. Perhaps you can't refresh my memory.

No, I define life by events, experiences and people. I made a postive comment about the late Vic Clark the other day. What was your response?

We're supposed to do what we like in your mind?

Well now, it certainly seems wrong. I'd have likely said, "To my way of thinking, people should do what they enjoy doing. Of course, that'd be wrong too. Everyone is faced with doing some responsible things or some unpleasant things or some things they'd rather not be doing.

See above. Add that you seem to measure men by their material possessions and by the trappings of worldly success. You miss a lot of things doing it that way.

Not really. I'm thinking that you must keep a spare face on hand for those occasion when you're zipping around visiting those friends.

I have my flaws, Len. I spend way too much time here, jousting with those who don't really have any impact on my life. I'm intolerant of boneheads, blowhards and the stupid. I am an Extra Class Amateur Radio licensee and I use morse code among the several others I enjoy.

It is a factual statement, is it not?

> master" hierarchial order...

It is more than a hobby. Part 97 of the Amateur Service regs do not outline amateur radio as a hobby. There certainly is a hierarchy, though it does not necessarily depend upon one's license class. There's nothing wrong with being a beginner in amateur radio. To become a beginner, you'd need to start. You never started.

That's the kind of thing which I can guaranty to make your time as a beginner difficult.

No, but you'd be a beginner in amateur radio. You aren't there yet.

No, but you'd be a beginner in amateur radio. You aren't there yet.

Not at all. It has nothing to do with mode of operation. You'd still be an amateur radio beginner if you chose FM or SSB. Everyone who enters something for the first time is a beginner. Live with it.

You'd be a beginner at all of it, Len. You'd be a new licensee firing up your rig and calling CQ or responding to one. You'd need to know all the things which make for a good op and all of the pertinent regulations governing your operation. You'd need to know the techniques used by amateurs for specialized modes such as meteor scatter or auroral communications.

I've stated that being a beginner in amateur radio is not mode-dependent.

Yes, it does. I happen to think that is a good thing.

You're starting a speech, Len. The mode is in widespread use. It takes some skill to use. I already know that it chafes you.
Sorry to snip the rest of your speech. It is much too long and I don't have the time to devote to reading it.

That's not the kind of thing apt to stand you in good stead as an amateur radio beginner.

You've debated this within yourselves for some time. There are times when you write that I am a god and times when you write that I'm not a god. You've never developed a consensus.

That's pretty much the way I see you, Leonard--and you aren't even involved.

No, I'm sorry. I can't accept your attempt at claiming your motives are idealism. It just doesn't wash in light of your history of postings.
Even capitalization can't make me buy that.

I don't recall using the word "deviant". Maybe we're nearing a breakthrough.

I find your own self-righteousness to be suspect, Len--and remember: you aren't involved.

"Obstinacy", Len. You know, I've often had the same feeling about some guy who breezes into an activity with ideas about changing everything.
He usually does so with the mistaken idea that everything old is bad and that everything new is good. He takes the position that being seen as doing anything is better than being seen leaving things alone. The Foreign Service is rife with them. They typically get "promoted" to some position where they can't gum up the works.

You've not managed to peck your way in yet, Len. You keep babbling about self-worth, status, privilege and pecking order. Your own self-worth is tied up in this somehow. You aren't apt to change rank, status or pecking order in amateur radio or anything else with your attitude.

You were acting arrogant and superior from the very first day I read one of your posts in this newsgroup. You can't blame it on me. I hadn't yet made a post.

I can't speak for Miccolis. Heil perceives insult where there is insult. You are all about insult but you like to be on the giving end.
You don't do very well when on the receiving end.

That's awfully big of you, Len. It would really save a lot of extra

I think I'd have to direct my ire to more of society in order to be considered a sociopath, Len. Now you take a guy like Roger Wiseman.
You've seen his output here and you've seen the great numbers of individuals he has targeted. Now he's a sociopath. I'm just a guy who isn't likely to let your insults, wild inaccuracies and fabricated bafflegab go by unchallenged.

What's it to you? I was in the country where the war took place. I drew combat pay for my entire time in-country. I had orders which permitted me to anywhere in the geographical confines of the RVN.

Fess up, Len. Were you insulted simply because you were in the rear? Would you like to see it verbatim?

Well, that's flat out wrong.

It is much, much more than strong and it is certainly confrontational. When you're confrontational, you get confrontational in return. You've found that out. It doesn't work for you. It makes you no converts.

It seems that you often follow rude and insulting remarks with smileys.

It is quite appropriate. If you find it insulting, good. Maybe you'll Steve deserved the label you made up for him? You have facts at your disposal? I've not seen any--just speculation.

And the "Nursie" thing and the "Murine" thing you cooked up long before any CB Frank showed up? What were they about? That leads me back to that "Sphincter post" of yours. You wrote of what it was like to be under an artillery barrage, only it turned out that you'd never been under any artillery barrage. That's all very good, Len, but not all that unique. I entered the military and began operating in large scale HF communications at age 19.
I'd already been a ham for nearly five years by then. Thanks to the knowledge I'd already gained as a ham, I was able to skip Air Force tech school and proceed directly to my first duty station. There are thousands of stories like that. They aren't particularly special.

You don't explain how it can be that they get back what they hurl when you've done the first hurling. How can that be?

That's all great, Len. I really don't care all that much about your military service or your ordinary life. I have no doubt that you served when you say your served and where you say you served. I have a little problem with you doing the sphincter post, the Soviet Bear post and hitching your wagon to the fellows in your outfit who were killed in a war zone while you were safely in the rear.

> While not an exceptional

I have no doubts of that. What accounts for your inability to accept that others have lives which exist, have existed and are real? What accounts for your necessity of playing the ultimate expert and the necessity of derogatory remarks made by you toward the jobs or military service of others?

You need to ask yourself if you're in a position to write checks that your body can't fill. About the only guys who tremble at the wrath of a guy in his seventies are guys in their eighties.

I've never claimed to be neutral, Len. Neither did I use a document

You've not made a shift. Your words in the material above make it clear that you've no intention of reverting to reasoned debate. Your behavior here is asinine.

That's mere wind, Leonard. You don't assign or remove points here.

...nor are you, Len. Your last statement on the matter was that you have no intention of getting an amateur radio license and you don't have a license to upgrade. Anything which changes amateur radio effects those already licensed. I am in that category.

It's not my job to prove you right. Hans tried, bless his heart.

But you want your internet arguments to go on and on and on. All you had to do was give up some information about your claims of seven hostile actions five years ago, but no. Now after years of bad information about everything else, you want someone else to prove you right about uniform issue?

Good luck.

Big holes, Len.

Unless a medical waiver was obtained, in which case the Extra could be had for a code test of as little as 5 wpm.

The "modern" Extra class license was added in the 1951 restructuring
that also added the Novice and Technician class licenses. The code test speed
for the Extra was set at 20 wpm at that time.

No, that's not true at all.

What about the thousands of others - like myself - who earned the license because we wanted the privileges? In my case, that was in 1970, at the age of 16.

Where?

Back then those test elements were only given by FCC examiners. They were not legally available to folks like you (outside of FCC). In fact, back then FCC required 2 years' experience as a General or higher license just to try
the Extra test.

But you don't really know because you didn't take both. Some of those who did
take both say the Extra written was "harder".

I took a look at those comments. The teacher is clearly in support of continued Morse Code testing. So there is nothing "WRONG" with the classification in the Speroni count.

How would you classify the English Teacher's comment, Len?

btw, that English Teacher is a member of the public expressing an opinion to the FCC. First Amendment and all that.

Yes, you do, Len. You're neither into amateur radio

So what? The teacher's comments are clearly pro-morse-code-test.
That's what counts for purpose of the tally.

"warrant".

I've done the same, Len. No big deal.

2054. Galaxy Electronics Founder Leo Meyerson Asks FCC To Deny K1MAN Renewal

This is a post to QRZ.COM by K3VR and reads as follows:

Leo Meyerson, W0GFQ, is the latest high profile ham to come out publicly about Glenn Baxter's license. You probably remember Leo as the founder of WRL and Galaxy Electronics. Walter Cronkite also came out publicly against Baxter's (ex-k1man) renewal.

In fact, Leo just sent a letter to the FCC about Baxter. You can find the letter and a discussion of Baxter's renewal here:

"Leo Meyerson is an acknowledged pioneer in the field of radio. Leo is the founder of World Radio Laboratories and Galaxy Electronics. Throughout the years Leo has been very active in public service. A life member of the Quarter Century Wireless Association, Leo served as a National Director from 1977 to 1987. In 1991 he was named the QCWA Amateur Member of the year and in 1994 he was inducted into the QCWA Hall of Fame. Leo is also a life member of the American Radio Relay League, Society of Wireless Pioneers, and International Mission Radio Association among other associations. In 1980 Leo was elected a fellow of the Radio Club of America, one of the most prestigious radio clubs in America.

Leo Meyerson is the second radio icon to denounce Glenn Baxter, ex-K1MAN. The other, famous broadcaster Walter Cronkite, has publicly stated that he has experience with Baxter's lack of ethics. Cronkite also called on the FCC to deny renewal of Baxter's amateur radio licenses."

The only "issue" you have at your disposal to play with is my refusal to discuss certain aspects of my military service. Everything else has been dispositioned with references to third party sources that can verify my claims.

That you refuse to use them is your problem, not mine.

And "clathing"...?!?!

It will be interesting to see if Markie jumps in and accuses you of "defiling" Dick.

I just mentioned his old call was about to be eligible for reissue, and he (Col. Pagan) went on and on about "defiling" the dead...

I think if the Founding Fathers could see how their wonderful gift

I seem to recall seeing one of Len's recent posts where he attempts a slam at Jim Miccolis by writing something about a four digit IQ. I suppose that's possible if we use the Morgan scale, where the low end is 200.

Snidely Whiplash is a character from American literature?

Please quote the part stating that older-timers influencing the NAAR had been professional telegraphers.

I thought I just explained this. I was licensed in 1963. The Extra Class license was available in that year (and in subsequent years leading up to Incentive Licensing) but no additional privileges were attached. One could obtain the very same privileges with a General Class ticket. You claim that former professional telegraphers lobbied to have the Extra Class created so they'd have a "free set of perquisites". That claim doesn't hold water. To obtain the Extra Class license, one had to pass a more difficult written exam as well as passing a more difficult morse exam. More privileges were granted after Incentive Licensing was phased in over a two-year period. The FCC implemented Incentive Licensing. Are you familiar with the word "incentive"?

I concede that you were almost right. Your claim about old time operators lobbying for extra perks by dreaming up a higher speed code exam is still bogus. No one ever obtained an Amateur Extra without passing a more difficult written exam. I wrote that part. You didn't.
It looks like you've almost conceded that I was right. :-)

Courage isn't involved, Len. You initial claim was and is bogus.

That hasn't been established. That depends what we're discussing. I have far more HF radio operations experience than you, and at a far earlier age. I likely know quite a bit more about antennas and HF propagation than you. It is also likely that I have far more VHF/UHF operations experience though I lack the experience in some exotic modes you've mentioned. I have no doubt that you have the edge in electronics theory.

Precisely. The internet is what you do. Watching TV is what you do.
Haunting an amateur radio newsgroup is what you do.

Of course you have the option to take an amateur radio license exam or not. Passing one is another matter.

Actually to participate in amateur radio, the FCC requires you to obtain a license. I'll try harder in future to become less bigoted toward control freaks.

What are you doing about it? After all, you post here. Why don't you tell us what can be done about such people, especially when they misuse anonymous remailers. When they're bounced from one, they typically just find another. Give us your professional advice.

Does this mean you support the filth mongers right to foul the newsgroup? I'm sure you've written a lengthy position paper on the matter. Let me have your ideas. Maybe I can come up with some useful tactics based from your efforts in the area.

You've made some rather obvious errors. One of them appears to be a deliberate effort to make it sound as if you'd written something different.

No it is neither pathetic nor weak. The person who writes of "the control-freak wigging-out on English semantics, word structure, etc., ectc.!!!" seems rather pathetic and weak. What you offered initially isn't what you later presented. The two statements are quite different in key respects.

That's kinda funny. The "modern" Extra is, therefore, 54 years old. How long did the pre-modern Extra exist before 1951. Or even better, how long did radio as a practical medium exist before 1951.

The legality of the availability of actual test info has never been proven either way. Bash made the info available and was never challenged. The FCC let it all go by which isn't proof absolute that it may or may not have been legal, but the absence of action ultimately made it legal over the long haul.

Amateur radio might be operating weak signal UHF SSB with a multi-mode, multi-band rig. It might be operating 2m FM through a local repeater.
It might be ragchewing on 40m CW. One constant is that you aren't involved.

Not in the 1980's, not in the 1990's and not in 2000. You weren't involved in any fashion.

Dark ages, Leonard. You were never employed by the U.S. Department of State, just as you were never in amateur radio.

I'm not particularly interested. Why do you live in the past?

It was not used for long. It wasn't seen as practical. Back to my employment: You were never involved.

How does that make you involved in my employment?

They weren't. Their demise was quick. They were supplanted by state of the art (for the time) Teletype Model 40 gear. That equipement was used long past its obsolescence. It was phased out in the late 1980's and early 1990's. How were you involved in my job?

Bully for you. No license is required as long as you don't put it on the air.

I'm not dismissing a great big hobby area involving all of electronics.

I don't know why it'd bother radio amateurs. I'm sure that you meant that the Army gave up the use of morse for long haul, point-to-point bulk relayed message traffic. Otherwise your statement could be seem as incorrect. Amateur radio isn't about the Army.

Do you know any radio telephonists who've never ventured beyond the front panels of their equipment? Does their skill extend beyond their microphones? Have they picked up any "official" jargon from older days?
Perhaps your rant was intended only as a slam against anyone who is both

While not official, that profile is based upon long experience in

Do you mean the ARRL? Yes, if he is a member. Even if he isn't an ARRL amateurs. The guy who passed his Tech last week is a member. The guy

There would have been no point in my obtaining anything for HDTV SIX years ago. I've been back in the U.S. for five years. Large amounts of programming wasn't available nationally and regional and local stations weren't transmitting it. While Dish Network offered digital television, it did not offer HD at that time.

Plain and simply innaccurate, Len. The US Navy used Morse for long-haul HF communications with its surface fleets well into the 1960's and with its submarine fleet into the 1980s from stations NAA (Culter, ME), NLK (Jim Creek, WA), NPM (Honolulu), NAU (Peurto Rico), and VKE-3 (Northwest Cape, Australia).

Hello, Jim

I'm going to have to really read up on the proposal. Why 9 KHz AM and not allow a data mode at 4.5 KHz doesn't make a whole lot of sense; then again, we are discussing government involvement in which case one shouldn't expect a whole lot of sense anyway. :)

In contrast, Dudly (as Robeson) just didn't pick out any Whatever you say, Hans. :-)

I was referring to the major message traffic handling which enabled the tremendous (and superior) logistics capability of the U.S. military keeping its worldwide presence during and long after the end of WW2.

I was not attempting to impugn the United States Navy with any negative criticism. The USN was the chief encourager and supporter of early radio communications in the United States. So much so that, at one point, the USN wanted to control ALL radio, military AND civilian! [reference:
"The Continuous Wave, Technology and American Radio 1900-1932," by Hugh G. J. Aitkin, Princeton University Press, 1985] Early radio required morse code skill due to the primitive technology restricting communications to using on-off keying codes. Note: The vast majority of communications used on-off keying codes then despite some experimentation with voice, time-signal, and teleprinter communications which worked but did not survive in those exact modes, even when the vacuum tube became feasible.

>The US Navy used Morse for long-haul HF >communications with its surface fleets well into the 1960's and with its >submarine fleet into the 1980s from stations NAA (Culter, ME), NLK (Jim Creek, >WA), NPM (Honolulu), NAU (Peurto Rico), and VKE-3 (Northwest Cape, Australia).

You forgot one station.

And it is "Cutler, ME" and "Puerto Rico" isn't it? :-)

The majority of communications insofar as message traffic was done as I stated, by teletypewriter. Yes, there was a Fleet capability using morse code mode as you say. I have no conflict with that. However, looking at ALL communications necessary to maintain that Fleet, my historical sources still point to the teletypewriter as being the major "traffic" handling device for all branches since the beginning of the USA's involvement with WW2.

I WILL question that submarines NOW use ANY morse code for either communications or Alert signalling or did in the late 1980s. While I've had some contact with DoD on that, I'm not permitted to say yea or nay. I will point to the Federation of American Scientists (FAS) website where they show a diagram with identifying nomenclature of all equipment in a missle submarine's "radio room." None of that has any indication of morse code capability.

The USAF promoted single-channel (single-user) SSB on HF in the latter half of the 1940s for Strategic Air Command communications. Of two major developers, RCA and Collins Radio, Collins capitalized on that experience to design, market, and sell "SSB" HF radio equipment to amateurs and commercial companies alike. That started the changeover from AM voice to SSB voice in amateur HF bands. However, commercial and military SSB, multi-channel (rather multi-circuit) radio equipment was up and working on HF from the very early 1930s. During WW2 and after, that multi-circuit SSB bore the brunt of messaging traffic (via TTY) for all branches of the U.S. military.

The early top-level cryptographic communications in The Fleet (from at least 1940) was the "rotor machine" teletypewriters, according to at least two texts on cryptographic history from the 1960s. Those enabled unbreakable communications in the Pacific of decrypted Japanese fleet instructions and is considered part of the essential means to win the Battle of Midway. That "rotor machine" method was never compromised by any nation (friend or foe) until later-generation equipment was captured intact on the USS Pueblo. An example of that machine is on the USS Pampanito floating museum website, there labeled as "SIGABA." From other sources, those machines were, essentially, modified Model 15 or Model 19 teletypewriters made by Teletype Corporation.

My use of "plain, simple fact" phrasing is just copying Miccolis' use. He likes to use that in his technique to destroy opposing viewpoints by claiming that the least example of an exception totally and completely "destroys" any rule expressed by an opponent. It does not, but he persists. <shrug>

BTW, the only bell-bottoms I wore were as a civilian, none of them in blue, and had zippers, not buttons. :-)

Wait...maybe it's all in a "missing baggage" room at some airport!

Dudly is big on flapping his wings about aviation. Airports are concerned with aviation. Many folks "lose baggage" at airports.
It all kinds of hangs together, donut? :-)

Dud still has missing baggage, though...

Yes. "Send poorly!" :-) Remember it well.

Big boost for morsemen and their cries of sending good.

I wish these Extra Morsemen would get their stories and won't accept it. :-)

There were "Q&A" books on tests-and-answers for radio and electricity back in the ancient history days of the 1950s. Hardbound, not the best quality paper, roughly the size of a Reader's Digest Condensed Book.

There was no hue and cry over those "Q&A" books then.
Gene Hubbel's "H and H Electronics" store in Rockford Illinois had the amateur radio test editions for sale.
Both partners were pre-WW2 hams, Gene (SK) had W9ERU
then, later W7DI after moving to Arizona in retirement.
Gene was a morseman and had a couple certificates for passing greater than 60 WPM using morse and a "mill."

Dick Bash and his schools came later. Why he got bashed so harshly is still curious to me. It might have been that his school/book logo had two four-letter words in it? :-)

And I'm not afraid to switch to CW right in that phone band when someone

Len it is my underststanding that one or more of the Navy sub systems used or at least were desugned to able to use a non manual morse system that would have allowed for decoding of the signal of the signals manualy in the event that the sub suffered damage, and survived ( current comabt theory seems ot say that a hit is a kill but..) . I heard rumors that this system was developed and used for some time very slow haviely "fransworthed" Morse indeed a demo I heard once in an unclisified army breifingwas slow enough and farnworthed enough I could read it (take down the dot and dashes) for looking up on a chart. the amry considered and rejected such system as I hear it, did look more into a Non morse encoded OOKed CW system designed for machine use with the abilty for a jerry rigged unit allowing manual decoding of the coded gruops that barely (if at all) got off the ground (end of the cold war killed it) that with the fact I have heard some signal at very low freqs sending what could be morse and heard em till the navy shut down the elf unit that sits within a 100 miles of my current home means I think there was some use of NON manual Morse in Navy till quite recently (since 9/11) My computer decoded them as seemingly random letter groups using a Morse back ground they stopped comeing when the Navy shut down the elf unit

Stevie wants us to know he is an ER LPN which means given his address

Rabbi Phil,

Before I post the latest exchange, let me address your commentary. Yes, I do go from controversy to controversy, in ham radio because I was apart of the subjects' lives of which I write. I like to think I'm empathetic (see "K1MAN Has a Case"), using the First Amendment to make a difference (see "The Florida Bar is Corrupt, both a newsgroup and an article).

My life at 66 is extremely full: Angelic Wife of 12 years, great grand children, a novel "Death of a River Pilot," slated for publication (hopefully) in the future, from retirement a new business called Entertainment Central, which is more successful than any of my businesses in my "working days.'

Now informed, perhaps you need ask yourself about getting your own life, lest you continue with wasted words on faulty predicates.

And now the latest W4ASX/K1MAN Exchange for those interested.

W4ASX Answers K1MAN's Haughty Quotation 11/21/2005

Trouble is, when you think you know more than the regulators, when you think you can interpret the Constitution without the Supreme Court, when you see agents and conspiracies all around you, when you assume falsely, when you are unwilling to listen and comprehend your reading, when you resort to the bombast of glittering generailities, instead of addressing specifics, when you break your arm complimenting yourself on stellar legal knowledge while, at the same time, declaring essentially you won't be regulated, your deathknell..

Trouble is, when you think you know more than the regulators, when you think you can interpret the Constitution without the Supreme Court, when you see agents and conspiracies all around you, when you assume falsely, when you are unwilling to listen and comprehend your reading, when you resort to the bombast of glittering generailities, instead of addressing specifics, when you break your arm complimenting yourself on stellar legal knowledge while, at the same time, declaring essentially you won't be regulated, your deathknell..

It does have that appearance. Why don't hams working for the FCC have to put away their licenses as to not incur a conflict of interest?
That would like having a big oil president and vice president holding

Given the millions and millions and millions spent on communications infrastructure...

" " "The National Guard cited antiquated communications technology-as a contributor to its delayed response. Lt. Gen. Steven Blum told USA Today that there was a shortage of high-tech radios and satellite communications gear. "We were underequipped," Blum told USA Today. "We don't need tanks and attack helicopters... but we must have state-of-the-art radios and communications." " "

The Guard most certainly does need attack helicopters. That's what differentiates the Guard from "AmeriCorps." The Guard is an >>>Armed<<< Service.

" " "The Guard has historically gotten "handmedown" equipment from active-duty military. It now uses "Vietnam-era radios while it needs 37,000 newer radios," according to Guard budget briefings." " "

OK, lets fund the Guard.

" " "Meanwhile, ham radio operators proved that older technology can be the most reliable technology. Our EDA Editor (and ham) David Maliniak wrote an online column on the subject, pointing out that sometimes "old works when new doesn't." (Read it and add your comments at ED Online 11136.) During and after Katrina, hams running on generators (sometimes with makeshift antennas) worked throughout the hurricane zone to put emergency stations on the air. They guided rescuers to stranded victims and updated weather services via the Hurricane Watch Net." " "

Wait a minute. The Guard says their equipment is antiquated and needs replaced, but the ARS service says that older technology may be what is needed.

Obviously, they can -both- be right. When wide area vhf+ comm systems go down, they have to switch to simplex where they can, and HF/NVIS networks for the rest of the area.

Certainly they have mobile repeaters and towers on trailers, don't they? A Honda 1K that is so quiet that it doesn't interrupt comms, and sips gasoline. A lot of ham clubs have that setup, why not the government?

Why not indeed. Government contractor steps up and takes a 10K project and turns it into 275K contract.

Police department needs 3 of them. Sherrif needs 1. Fire department needs 3. The Guard needs 3. Governor/EMA needs 2.

12 x $275k = $3,300,000 instead of $120K.

Then they store it in the impound lot with the wrecked cruisers and fire trucks, exercise it every three of four years whether it needs it or not. Stale gas in the Honda generator gas tank; sputter sputter, sputter.

Somebody writes an article and calls it "antiquated" equipment.

Yep. Introduced as part of the restructuring of 1951.

> exist before 1951.

For a few years in the mid-1920s, there was an amateur license called the "Amateur Extra First Grade" IIRC. It required more testing than the standard amateur license, and allowed certain additional privileges. It wasn't very popular because the additional privileges were about 200 meter operation, and the exodus to the short waves had already begun.

That was before FCC and even FRC.

> Or even better, how long did
> radio as a practical medium exist before 1951.

Well, that depends on what you mean by "a practical medium".

But a half-century is about right.

What does that have to do with the license class?

We're talking about two different things, Bill.

Len claims to have seen a 1957 version of the test for Extra, and says it wasn't as hard as the First 'Phone of that time.

While it is not absolutely impossible for him to have seen that exam,
it is highly improbable that he ever saw that exam, because it was simply not available to people who neither worked for FCC nor took the amateur exams. FCC kept the tests under lock and key. One can only imagine the reaction of an FCC examiner in 1957 if someone asked to see the Extra class written test just to see how hard it was.

I wish Phil Kane, K2ASP, would weigh in on this.

Now to Dick Bash...

Bash did his thing in the early 1970s - more than a decade after Len's supposed look at the Extra test of 1957. He never got a look at the written tests, though. What he did was to ask people who had just taken the tests
what was on them, and paid for any useful information they could recall.
He essentially reverse-engineered the tests without actually seeing them.
His books were not the exact tests but were very, very close, with only trivial differences.

Yes, FCC did not go after him legally. And the whole issue became moot a few years later (early 1980s) when FCC made the test contents public.

The plain simple fact is that at least some of those who took and passed both the First 'Phone and the Amateur Extra say the Extra was harder. I've not heard of anyone who took and passed both exams say the First 'Phone was harder.

I'm not sure if Steve actually started, but if he did, he didn't last 24 hours before he started yet another new thread posting my name and callsign and demanding answers.

Did you see in another thread where he changed your attribution from "an old friend" to "raped an old friend"?

What a jerk.

Len, you claimed to have seen an Amateur Extra written

There were a number of such books. But they were not the actual exam. Looking at a study guide book is not the same thing as seeing the actual exam.

Did you see the actual exam, Len, or just one of the study guides?

> There was no hue and cry over those "Q&A" books then.

Because they weren't the actual exam.

FCC issued "study guides" that outlined the subject areas of the various tests. Anyone could write questions and answers based on those tests, but they would not be the actual exam.

How?

The ARRL did not create the Extra class license in 1951. They did not lobby for it either.

So? That's what responsible parents do.

I also had to go to school and make acceptable grades. Do all assigned chores at home and work (yes, I worked then). Plus all the usual activities of a kid my age back then.

I don't do any RF transmission in amateur bands, with the an amateur radio license or using morse code! And 24/7

Actually 'buy them' since they bought two.

The GM "tank factory" in Michigan bought a half dozen,

I was addressing - specifically - who I addressed, not
"radio telephonists." You are attempting to misdirect.
The word you should have used is 'radiotelephony.'

NPRM 05-143 is singularly about the telegraphy test. [that's what this "english teacher" of the thread title was commenting on] That NPRM has NOTHING to do with radiotelephony, radiodata, teletypewriter over radio, slow or fast-scan television, facsimile over radio. The amateur radio license tests have NO test elements for physically OPERATING any radio, are not required to have radio equipment AT a license exam site.

The sole manual test for anything at any amateur license exam is about telegraphy, telegraphy as used on amateur radio (there is NO landline telegraphy tested), more technically, radiotelegraphy. As it is NOW, that is.

The written test elements are prepared, both questions and multiple-choice question answers, by the VEC QPC. Those cover "radio theory" (actually electronics in general since there are no exclusive-to-amateur-radio circuits) and Commission regulations. While some questions pertain to "radio operating," there is no actual, hands-on, demonstratable ability to OPERATE any radio, let alone amateur radio. Some in here as well as in commentary on the NPRM misuse "operating"
to refer almost exclusively to RADIOTELEGRAPHY.

Am I saying that many radio amateurs don't know squat about radio theory? ABSOLUTELY. I charge that based on MY life experience in answering, as politely as possible, questions of rather elementary level on radio theory. I was answering questions, giving CORRECT answers, as a NON-amateur but also as a very professional radio-knowledgeable person. All too many of those questions from radio amateurs chronologically older than I was were so simplistic, so indicative of a basic understanding of radio and propagation principles that I would lump them as less than Novice class amateurs. I could care less that they might be able to do 40 WPM radiotelegraphy with "perfect copy" any time. I could care less if they had earned every possible "radiosport" contest as amateurs. They were still deficient in a basic understanding of radio theory, deficient at an elementary level. In a radio activity that grants BOTH an operator and station license, it showed me that they couldn't possibly meet the technical regulations of amateur radio to match their lofty rank-status-privileges

they were granted.

I'm FAR LESS likely to be an ARRL/NAAR member than a licensed radio amateur...unless they do some drastic changes to their public policy.

Every single licensed radio amateur in the United States was NOT a ham until they passed their first amateur test. Why do you keep harping on that?

You keep demanding that the only persons who can talk about amateur radio regulations MUST be a licensed radio amateur?
Why is that? The FCC is NOT a club...it is a radio regulating agency...for ALL civil radio. The FCC is NOT a fraternal organization, was never chartered to be one.

The "National Association for Amateur Radio" (nee' ARRL) is the "club." Even so, their membership is only one of every five U.S. amateur radio licensees. Why aren't there more?

The percentages of membership have never become greater than a quarter of all licensees.

Your blatant problem is some weird self-righteous elitism wherein you claim that no one licensed can "know" anything about amateur radio. That's just a plain, simple lie.
Were it true then there would be NO newcomers to amateur radio licensing because they would not know enough to pass any test!

There's more, but you will try to get out such charges. :-)

No, MOTIVATION. You try to personalize all opinions, then you generate false "reasons" why all must do as you specify, including liking what you like.

What MOTIVATES you to behave in such a manner?

What MOTIVATES you to get all hot and bothered about ONE

"Precisely" what? Is amateur radio a forbidden subject to anyone

Your motivation in all that activity is suspect.

United States amateur radio is NOT a "Lodge." That you think so is not a definition nor a legality of existance.

The FCC is NOT a fraternal organization nor a fraternal order

Are you sure it isn't BILL Amidon? :-) Why no "correction?" :-)

Amidon is/was a licensed radio amateur; I don't know if he is SK or not. Amidon ads have been in QST for over two decades. Hams who actually build radio things should be familiar with the name.

Does this mean you are dissing a fellow radio amateur? Tsk.

Why? I have no personal interest in morse code and no interest in amateur radio contesting. Invitation denied.

One can listen OUTSIDE the amateur radio bands and NOT hear much radiotelegraphy. Hardly a beep to be heard...still lots of SSB and AM voice, data (TORs mostly), international broadcasting, standard time signals. Not much morse code.

Two things come to mind:

(1) If you were REALLY that concerned, you would have done a "Markie" and changed the subject line. This now makes the FIFTH response with your name and call in it. Obviously it's NOT that big an issue for you.

(2) What MISbehave? Did I call you a bad name? Did I threaten you? No. I asked you a question that the HONEST answer to is going to be embarrassing to you. THAT'S too bad, but it seems to be YOUR norm here, too! You make all of these insulting insinuations of your own, yet seem to think that it's all one sided.

So....the question STILL stands (as do a dozen others which you've never anwered, but I am hopeful...) What is YOUR excuse for using diminutives towards others that DON'T use them towards you?

His contributions to ham radio were only exceeded by the

I disagree. I am not Miccolis' tailor. If he needs slacks, he can go to the nearest Salvation Army thrift shop and get some at low cost.

I don't really care what those others do. I'm of the opinion that they are either: 1. Lying; 2. Haven't got the courage to say outright; 3. Haven't got the courage to reveal what they do at their work.

Dave Heil is supposed to be retired on his State Department pension, therefore he doesn't work. We don't know for sure exactly what Miccolis does at work or on what; all we get are vague inferences and one of his Comments stated he "works on vehicular systems." That could be anything from choo-choos to little warehouse loaders or even electric bicycles. :-)

Once someone gets an amateur license, their address becomes public knowledge. The only "hiding" they can do then is to use a Post Office box or equivalent, but must furnish the city, state, and Zip code where that box is located. The most notorious in here was KH6HZ using a fake Hawaii address along with several "club" calls where he was "trustee"! The FCC closed down those "clubs" and he had to amend his personal license to a Rhode Island address.

I've had my exact mailing address published in Ham Radio magazine for over two decades in my bylines. I don't have any qualms about revealing my surface mail address. I still live at that address. My only surface mail "spam" is local. A few people took the trouble to write me some good words about the help they got from my articles. Those were answered promptly and with thanks. The only brickbat received was from a southeastern state amateur who had some faulty basic theory; a check-in with the HR staff proved he was a source of irritation (and faulty theory) to several other authors.

As to that month-old issue of Electronic Design, I've already put it in the recycling can. [new issues received today, including Electronic Products and EDN double-issue...even a new Mouser catalog] I'm sure that some radio amateurs have saved that editorial as some kind of "proof" of the something in amateur radio and will use it as a "reference" for many years. :-)

Sorry to break your brag bubble lennieboy, but ham radio has already reached 'ennoblement' into 'higher' service to the nation. Many times in the past and present, especially with the service that hams provided during Katrina and Wilma. You just can't be a part of it and that really gets up your nose.

Mark, it is really irrelevant what the USN uses for Alert messaging to submarines in this newsgroup. "We" aren't supposed to talk about anything non-amateur...:-)

Suffice to say that those boats DO use code. It just isn't morse code. Alert messages WERE sent on very low frequencies using very slow data-rate DATA. The reason for very slow data rate was signal-to-noise ratio and a very narrow bandwidth at ELF or even VLF and to allow submarines to pick up Alerts while still submerged. While ELF and VLF does penetrate water, water still has attenuation of the radio signal so the S:N ratio puts a limit at the depth they can be to receive the Alert. There WAS automatic decoding equipment in the boat's "radio room" for Alerts.

I used past tense because I do not know what the boats use
NOW. I'm not going to inquire, either. I've got confidence in the USN and NSA being able to Alert Boomers and Sharks
as needed without fear of being compromised.

I no longer have any confidence that our country's leadership can use their intelligence reports intelligently...but that is a subject for a separate newsgroup. :-)

The information on the FAS website (a considerable amount) is interesting. Whether it represents the "truth" or not is a subject for the intelligence community's analysis. So far the FAS has continued to function, stay on-line without any closures from the government.

There IS some information about the NSA and DIA and CIA that has been cleared for publication. I have some of those books. Amazon has them on sale.

But, amateur radio is forbidden by the Commission regulations from using any encipherment that obscures the meaning of a communication. Hans has not been forthcoming on lecturing us on the precise sub-parts on that. Since I am unlicensed in the amateur service, several others are attempting to forbid my mentioning anything. :-)

The questions in those books were 'typical' of what one would expect on the test. What you got on the test would be similar, but not exactly like in the Q&A guides, and it wasn't all multiple choice either, there were problems that had to be actually worked out.

Bash would hang outside the door of the examining office and catch hams as they came out. He would ask them to write down all the questions they could remember. The FCC only had several different exams on each element. Bash then compiled a book of the exact questions that could appear on any of the exam sheets along with the answers. That made it a simple memorizing exercise to pass the test. Many hams, and rightly so, looked at that as cheating, just as it would be in school or college.

in point of fact they both can be right

the virtue of Ham radio is we can forge links as we need to the downside is by and large we have to every time, the abilty to use use the resource is of value when "something that got overlooked shows up" problems with that senario are the ARS lack much abilty to forge stable conections and must invent them continously this is hard for your govt and other first responders to use so they gtry to go higher and higher tech trying to not to need us ham ego's also get in the way as witness the reaction saying that the response of ham radio was less than it could have been while much better then the Govt own response

Yes I am dispointed in the response I saw and heard to Katrina and Rita
I am apaled by the response of LA and NO not thrilled with FEMA either but as can be send they are dependant on the locals for infrastructure

In 1951 there was no Internet, no easy way to "talk" to the FCC except through legal outfits and lobbying organizations
all using the "proper" format in their paperwork. Everything was surface mail if you couldn't afford special couriers.
The League could afford a legal firm then and they filed nice legalese documents with the Commission. With a relative scarcity of correspondence incoming they could pay attention to the League then. The League enjoyed a high place on amateur regulation correspondence with the FCC then. Any individual writing longhand, without legal terms or in any

"approved" format got chuckled at. Things were more
"patrician" then.

Things are a bit different now. Internet access to ALL government is faster than overnight express mail. FCC has to accept ALL filings. By law. The correspondence on hot-ticket Dockets is enormous compared to more than a half century ago. ALL radio has increased in scope and the FCC is stuck with having to regulate an enormous set of radio services affecting millions and millions more than existed
in 1951.

In 1951, as in 1956, the ENTIRE set of regulations of the FCC could be put in a medium-sized loose-leaf binder. The nicely-printed sheets were already punched for that and one could be on a subscription list from the USGPO to receive update pages. Before 2001 the entire set of regulations wound up taking FIVE volumes of softbound books and printed new every two years. Those who had Federal Register
subscriptions could get "updates" also in 1951 but by 2001
those updates could be obtained from the Federal Register
online.

While your remark about conflict of interest has merit,
Brian, I would remind everyone that regulation of amateur radio is a SMALL part of the total FCC regulatory requirement. Part 13, Title 47 C.F.R., has the regulations for Commercial Radio Operator licenses. I count 10 of those from my 1995 bound edition of Title 47. FCC has to regulate COLEMs as well as the VEC. It would be difficult to have any "conflict of interest" at the FCC
on the basis of having only ONE out of 13 (or even 16)
different operator licenses.

Jimmie looks at himself as the "model" of what all others did, namely getting his in his teen years. Apparently, indoctrination during teen years is somehow spay-shul, more important than doing so later in life.

Jimmie did not MAKE any of the test regulations he passed. But, he passed them, so therefore all others must be like him? He had not achieved many years of expertise in radio communications then but now he will say he did. Jimmie just passed the tests which were put in place by much older regulators, lobbied for by much older radio amateurs than he.

Jimmie still doesn't regulate any radio service and still endeavors to hold the status as much quo as when he first achieved Extra at the ripe old age of 16 (35 years ago?).

In one of the harbor cities of Los Angeles. Available in various

The "Xerox machine" hadn't got into production yet in 1957.

The "Q&A" (Question and Answer) books got their info by various ways, including interviews with those who had passed the different tests. If they somehow purloined the test information they weren't prosecuted for it...

Anyone perusing the Copyright laws of the United States will find out that DIRECT REPRODUCTION of any U.S. government work is not quite punishable; the Copyright laws forbid the government from copyrighting their own work! The legal ramifications of that have to be worked out by legal people as to whether such things are forbidden to reproduce OR to reveal.

As you say, the Dick Bash organization is still in business
after many years (I think those old Q&A books might still be printed too), so the "Bash Books" weren't the high crime they were reputed to be in urban legend. <shrug>

In 1951 there was no Internet, no easy way to "talk" to the FCC except through legal outfits and lobbying organizations
all using the "proper" format in their paperwork. Everything was surface mail if you couldn't afford special couriers.
The League could afford a legal firm then and they filed nice legalese documents with the Commission. With a relative scarcity of correspondence incoming they could pay attention to the League then. The League enjoyed a high place on amateur regulation correspondence with the FCC then. Any individual writing longhand, without legal terms or in any

"approved" format got chuckled at. Things were more
"patrician" then.

Things are a bit different now. Internet access to ALL government is faster than overnight express mail. FCC has to accept ALL filings. By law. The correspondence on hot-ticket Dockets is enormous compared to more than a half century ago. ALL radio has increased in scope and the FCC
is stuck with having to regulate an enormous set of radio services affecting millions and millions more than existed
in 1951.

In 1951, as in 1956, the ENTIRE set of regulations of the FCC could be put in a medium-sized loose-leaf binder. The nicely-printed sheets were already punched for that and one
could be on a subscription list from the USGPO to receive update pages. Before 2001 the entire set of regulations
wound up taking FIVE volumes of softbound books and printed
new every two years. Those who had Federal Register
subscriptions could get "updates" also in 1951 but by 2001
those updates could be obtained from the Federal Register
online.

While your remark about conflict of interest has merit,
Brian, I would remind everyone that regulation of amateur radio is a SMALL part of the total FCC regulatory requirement. Part 13, Title 47 C.F.R., has the regulations for Commercial Radio Operator licenses. I count 10 of those from my 1995 bound edition of Title 47. FCC has
to regulate COLEMs as well as the VEC. It would be difficult to have any "conflict of interest" at the FCC
on the basis of having only ONE out of 13 (or even 16)
different operator licenses.

Jimmie looks at himself as the "model" of what all others did,
namely getting his in his teen years. Apparently, indoctrination
during teen years is somehow spay-shul, more important than
doing so later in life.

Jimmie did not MAKE any of the test regulations he passed. But,
he passed them, so therefore all others must be like him? He had not achieved many years of expertise in radio communications
then but now he will say he did. Jimmie just passed the tests which were put in place by much older regulators, lobbied for by much older radio amateurs than he.

Jimmie still doesn't regulate any radio service and still
endeavors to hold the status as much quo as when he first achieved Extra at the ripe old age of 16 (35 years ago?).

In one of the harbor cities of Los Angeles. Available in various

The "Xerox machine" hadn't got into production yet in 1957.
Passed around by hand, of course. :-)

The "Q&A" (Question and Answer) books got their info by various ways, including interviews with those who had passed the different tests. If they somehow purloined the test information they weren't prosecuted for it...

Anyone perusing the Copyright laws of the United States will find out that DIRECT REPRODUCTION of any U.S. government work is not quite punishable; the Copyright laws forbid the government from copyrighting their own work! The legal ramifications of that have to be worked out by legal people as to whether such things are forbidden to reproduce OR to reveal.

As you say, the Dick Bash organization is still in business
after many years (I think those old Q&A books might still be printed too), so the "Bash Books" weren't the high crime they were reputed to be in urban legend. <shrug>

2143. The "newcomer quotient" --- a serious policy question

Just finished another annual running to the two-weekend Sweepstakes contest (one weekend Morse, one weekend phone).

As many of you know, this contest simulates traffic handling protocols with a modestly challenging exchange with 5 information elements exchanged in each direction. One of those elements is a "check" which is a 2-digit number indicating the year the station was first licensed.

(This doesn't have any direct connection to the age of the operator, but it does tell you how long they've been licensed.)

During this years contest weekends I was struck by the higher incidence of "recent checks" in the phone event as compared to the Morse event.

Since I have Cabrillo logs available for the past 5 seasons of Sweepstakes, I did a quick Excel evaluation looking at the "newcomer" trend of the Sweepstakes contest. The total data population is right at 10,000 QSO's, so should be reasonably "statistically relevant".

My intent was to test my hunch about a higher tendency for recent licensees to be on phone, and that hunch proved true (no particular surprise), but in addition a much scarier trend rose out of the figures.

The numbers below show the percentage of my QSO's which had a recieved "check" in the current and 10 previous years (i.e., this year I counted "95" thru "05", last year "94" through "04", etc.)

(Tabular info best viewed in 'fixed width' font)

Year CW% Phone% Combined%

2001 7.4% 24.0% 17.5%
2002 6.9 18.8 13.5
2003 7.0 14.8 10.9
2004 4.5 14.0 8.7

As I mentioned, it's no surprise that newcomer contesters are more likely to be on phone, but the really scary part is that the overall percentages (regardless of mode) in the "licensed-in-the-last-10-years" are dropping so dramatically, almost halved in just 5 years.

If the trend of "newcomers active in contesting" is a representative subset of "newcomers active on the air in general" (as I suspect it is) then the future of our hobby has a rather disturbing look.

What are we (all of us) going to do to reverse this ominous trend?

Nope...MEANING that you are ill-prepared to duscuss radio policy issues and that you have no understanding of what's going on around you.

What attack thread?

I asked Brian a direct question.

He accuses me of "misbehaving", calling others names, etc, when it's C L E A R L Y evident that he does this to people who actually go out of their way to treat HIM with some dignity and respect.

UNLIKE you, who calls people a "sack of ####", I ahve NOT called

"20% of hams", or "20% of hams who responded to a particular survey"?

Now if you ran that same survey by a group of QRP homebrewers, the result would be closer to 100%.

Statistics is a powerful tool only if care is taken in how the sample population is chosen. But remember, the results only apply to that sample, not an entire population (unless sample = entire, which is quite rare).

Hmmmmmmmmmmmmm....

I don't remember EVER saying I wouldn't mention your name nor ask you questions, including one's that might embarrass you.

Are you not willing to PUT your REAL name behind your words?

I DID say I'd take a more civil tone with you inexchange for the same consideration.

Apparently the offer fell on deaf ears and unwilling flesh.

What did you decide a long time ago?

I ignore your wishes because you ignore everyone elses, Brian.

You want what you want, and unless what someone else wants is only that, too bad.

> While I've got your attention, why did you change Mark's attribution?

For the same reason you refuse to answer my question, Brian...Because I want to.

Now...if sandlot time is over, do we get an answer to the pending question about YOUR lack of civility towards those who don't treat you that way...?!?!

You seem to be making a lot of noise about my alleged incivility, Brian, but there's a lot longer history for you to account for.

Or do we attribute that to the NCTA Double Standard that you and the Feeble Five claim doesn't exist...???

Sigh. Being able to quote the law from a book is quite different than actually understanding what the law is saying. Reading comprehension is apparently not your forte'.

As to the mode of access: Those perfectly legitimate URIs are also available from several search engines. Are you going to accuse Microsoft and Inktome of hacking?

Here's a big, fat clue, Todd: Use any old text editior to create a text file named ".htaccess" and set its contents to

RewriteEngine on RewriteCond %{REQUEST_URI} !.*index.php$ [NC]
RewriteCond %{HTTP_REFERER} !^http://12\.156\.123\.[0-9]+
RewriteRule .*$ - [NC,F]

After that, place the .htaccess file in your azbb subdirectory. If your Apache server has mod_rewrite enabled (and it probably does), people who use standard browsers will be blocked from directly accessing all files except index.php. To access any of your images, they will have to click on a link on your own web pages. Any other link, including one typed directly into a browser, will be considered to be a "hot link," and access will be denied.

This isn't perfect security, because it depends upon the http-referer header which is supplied by the visiting browser. There is software "out there" which will allow the http-referer header to be intentionally manipulated, but that's a topic for advanced security.

The code above -- or some variation of it -- will protect you against 99.99% of the people browsing the web, including web bots.

And you should have known about it all along.

All right anon. Let's talk writing. While I'm only an apprentice for the past 30 years, I've had successful writers and editors take me under their wing. Over the period, effort has been made at clear expression whle covering the nuances.

There are two stories I've covered in detail: KV4FZ and K1MAN. (For those unfamiliar with the former, put into NG search "When the Feds Fanned Out.)

Let's talk about the K1MAN story visible to me: 1).Glenn pioneers bulletins, 2) His bulletins are formally annointed as legal by the FCC, 3) For a time in the 80's he devotes himself to good work, 4) He demontrates himself to be a dynamo, writing, producing and implementing an interesting bulletin, 5) He does good work around the world, 5) He then gets involved in questionable foreign policy, 6) His behavior becomes increasingly erratic, 7) He sees conspiracies and agents everywhere, 8) He begins an unwarranted, smeer campaign against Riley Hollingsworth, who has given him the utmost leniency, 9) When Riley writes essentially acknowledging the legitimacy of his broadcasts but questioning some facets, Glenn rejects out of hand what any normal person would be thrilled with, 10) Glenn increasingly exhibits grandiosity, wandering writings going nowhere with a pompous tone, 11) At a time when he is required to exhibit the character necessary to be a ham, he essentially says he won't be regulated, 12) Concommitently with 11, he claims mastery in advocacy.

Perhaps some readers find the above burdensome, an audience which would not be interested in reading me. There are other readers who will find this story as facinating as I. Brian, K3VR surely does and his superlative material reflects this. Right here on ham radio we're witnessing a guy over a long period of time with huge potential self destruct, material fit for Shakespeare.

Now, interested readers, here's the latest exchange:

Bob,

What a "jerk!" You were "splattering from 14.275 all over SATERN on 14.268 preventing check ins," and after a very courteous request from ND8V to turn off your amp (you were talking with a New England station and coming into Maine 40 Db over 9 here), you QSYed to 14.313 so as to wipe out everyone up there! You were in clear violation of FCC rules by using more power than required to maintain your amateur radio communications, and you deserve a $22,000 NAL! You don't see ND8V breaking any FCC rules do you?

All right, just got off this great enjoyment called ham radio to answer you. First, am surprised at your treatment of a real problem in which you characterize me as a "jerk," because within the half hour you had saluted me by IM with hallowed words and "God Bless."

Yes, I was informed of the splatter on 14275 by Mike, ND8V, who is increasingly active with Saturn. And yes, as detailed ahead, it was admittedly unintentional, faulty operating on my part. Both Mike and I often hear each other's splatter. As usual, I told Mike I would move and did as you indicate to 14313. Your story ends there.

But it continued: My only transmission 14313 was: "Is this frequency occupied?" Someone answered, and I moved to 14280. Again Mike came on and said I was splattering on 14275, whereupon I cut my ALC.

At that change, the ham with whom I was talking reported a major cut in splatter. After the qso I went right back to Mike, a technical expert, and asked if the cut made a difference with him. Yes, he said, explaining how automatic limiting works. I learned something from this: That I've got to strike a careful balance, running full power with minimal ALC.

As to the power necessary to conduct a qso, you have to be in the shoes ot the station operator to know what is required, a subjective call. I try with a passion to avoid interfering with anyone. And you know this. You also know, as does Riley, that I'm ammenable to regulation.

Glenn, in view of our exchange in which I've voiced no pleasure in seeing you devolve, hoping for a turnaround, and your biblical quotations with "God Blesses," this email to Riley speaks with a second voice.

I don't mind fielding whatever you have to say; but if you are to exhibit the integrity necessary to hold a license, play no games (with phony predicates and innuendoes) and speak with one honest voice. For, to me, your devious, misleading tone (not your opinions) renders you unfit for licensing as a ham radio operator. This is not to attack you but on careful consideration over a long period of your mental deterioration as evidenced by your operating practices on ham radio.

I don't mind your copying Riley; however had you not done so, this email would never have been written. I ask Riley to make this part of the K1MAN record

Beethoven would have been into it especially as he died in 1827. Still,

Nope. But if you expect me to hold to certain rules and standards, then you'd best be holding to them yourself.

Brian has an 8 year history of his own of verbally abusing people who do not so treat him, specifically the absuses towards Dave and Jim that he refuses to address.

You and he both can whine all you want to about the alleged victimization you attribute to me, but you both have yourselves to blame for it.

I'm holding the line so far on Brian but I'll hit the Lottery before you ever manage to get your act together.

Don't want anymore "Markie" and references to your misdeeds in claiming to be a Colonel, etc etc etc? Apologize. Say you'll stop the "Stevie" and withdraw your allegations of "stalking", "lying", "harrassment" etc etc etc and we'll be on the road to recovery.

Can't bring yourself to do it? Then stop whining about the way you get treated because you'll be getting exactly what you deserve.

Be interesting to see how you could set up the scoring matrix...... If it was simply length of contact (not the amount of information exchanged) then the real slow talkers/slow senders would win. A built in advantage for southerners!

Would you have an upper limit on a contact length, and would the scoring be linear...... for example 1 point per each 30 seconds of each contact, or hockey-stick scoring with 1 point for 30 seconds, 5 points for one minute, 100 points for five minutes, and a bazzilion points for an hour?

What would you use for multipliers?

The thought occurs that newcomers are often somewhat mic-shy --- would they be drawn to this kind of activity?

I suspect that many newcomers are intimidated by the action in contests like SS. They know they have no realistic expectation of winning. The efforts like participation pins may help a bit. Again looking at SS the first hours are quite frantic and top contesters give the exchange very fast. If a newcomer isn't quite sure what was said or what he must say they are not likely to respond.
I have heard some operators patiently explain what the exchange is and help a first timer. However this appears to be a relative rarity as it slows down the rate.
How about an incentive for the big scorers to work the newcomers? More points per QSO if the check is less than 5 years old? More points if the serial number is also below a certain threshhold? If it makes the big guns more likely to be helpful I thin it would encourage those that are a bit timid to join in. Also, can the contest logs be used to get credit toward ARRL awards like WAS the way it used to be for DXCC? Given the cost of QSLs and the return rate, that could also be an incentive for some newcomers.

BTW - How did you do?

I really LIKE that one! The contest sponsor would need to validate it however, or operators would adopt an artificially low number just to generate a run.

> More points if the serial number is also below a certain threshhold?

I'm not sure that one is workable ..... everyone starts out with serial #1, and the object is to rapidly increment that number so this would be a disincentive to do well, even to the newcomer (unless I don't understand what you propose).

In effect this is already in place. I uploaded my log to LoTW 10 minutes after the close of SS PH and already had close to 50 QSL's waiting for me. Right now LoTW supports just DXCC, but WAS and WAZ are next (soon) to be implemented.

> BTW - How did you do?

Not as well as I'd hoped. 773/79 on CW and 1043/80 on Phone weekend.

Phone weekend was especially frustrating, because conditions seemed so good.
Don't know what I did wrong, but just couldn't ratchet it up to the right level.
First few hours were OK (not great) with rates in the 70's, but then struggled with long bands until about midnight. Couple good hours on 40 after midnight, but not enough stations left to recover from the slow evening hours. Had a pretty good Sunday afternoon on 40 starting about 2000Z, but I think I was paying too much attention to my "half radio" (Drake R4C) looking for missing mults. Ended up about 400 Q's off my target.

May be time to look at a new radio. I know I'm missing a lot of weak stations on my run freqs, especially on 40M/80M. The Icom 775 attenuator doesn't seem to be any good on those bands, and consequently the front end folds up with a lot of strong adjacent RF. When N0AT, KT0R, NN7L, K0AD (all within a couple miles) stroke up on 80M you could power an amp by rectifying the RF off my antenna field!

Probably not clearly stated and hard to implement. I was thinking of someone with a small number for the time since contest started. That is, some way to encourage working those who might just be making occasional contacts.

LOTW goes part way but I think the old DXCC method was even simpler although it took longer. Once the contest results were published you could just claim credit for a station worked in the contest. However as I recall the number you could claim per DXCC submission was limited unlike LOTW. It sure helped me back in the days when I was chasing DXCC QSLs.

Still a good score. I had troubles with the 40M vertical on Saturday night. SWR had gone up so high I couldn't use the amp. FIxed it next morning. AS far as I can tell the guy mowing the nextdoor lawn must have run into the posts holding up the coax and broke the ground connection. Still managed to make some contacts with it.
Made my goal here of 80 in 80. Last one was VE2; that one always seems to be the hard one here.

<restored> Now whine,Lardass, whine!

Behold he shall ride upon a hard dick and his name shall be Lloyd Austin Davies.

And it came to pass that the king of knob jobs in Alabama, (as Lloyd is known) was gone for a long time, and some of the people celebrated and some speculated that he had died, some speculated that he was ill, some speculated that he was in Maryland at Ray Chason's apartment, and some even thought that the king of knob jobs in Alabama had been made a sex slave by Ray Chason and his butt buddies. It was then the people started to rejoice.

And when the niggers and crackheads heard the murmuring and rumours of the people they assured them that the king of knob jobs in Alabama was just busy sucking on one of his nigger neighbors big black dick and would address the people as soon as he could swallow that big load if nigger jizz. The neighbors in his hud apartment complex also knew that the project was the sucking of nigger dicks and telling lies and more lies, but they did not tell the people this for they did not desire to have a vice squad nightmare in the city of Deliverance Extras. Alabama liked to hear about the fat retarded one who proclaimed he was the king of knob jobs in Alabama.

And the niggers and crackheads reassured the people that everything was all right, and told them to prepare pyres and to cook meat, and to ice down beer and nehi soda, and to go out and buy potato chips and other unhealthy snacks from the traders who had immigrated to the kingdom from vietnam and the land of gaza. and so the went down to these little stores owned and bought these things. and they went home and warmed up their tv's, for the sabbath approached and the sabbath would bring more action from the mediocre football team at u of alabama, and the sabbath would bring plenty of exciting nob gobbling action and goo gobbling from the king of knob jobs in Alabama.

The king of knob jobs in Alabama in reality is a ghastly pale porker who stands only 5'6" and weighs an unhealthy 290 Lbs. His skin is as white as copying paper due to his night job of delivering pizzas to the ghetto neighborhood where he dwells in a filthy, roach infested hud hovel. He doesn't venture outside during the daylight hours, instead preferring to play with star trek and dalek dolls, post lies and filth on the internet and jack off and dream of finally actually getting some pussy. Not stick pussy which his homosexual lover Steve Holsten feeds him several times a year when Lloyd goes for his visits, usually around Thanksgiving.

Lately, the king of knob jobs in Alabama has been consumed with posting pictures of someone he says is Roger Wiseman. In fact, the obviously botched purple rendering of somebody else has been cut and pasted, photoshopped and distributed all over the internet by the king of knob jobs in Alabama and his homosexual fantasy lover Ray Chason who is the king of knob jobs in Maryland. Chason who is also a porker has set up a blog of Roger's ex-wife "Regina" telling even more lies. Roger wasn't ever married to anyone named Regina. Of course Chason and Lloyd refuse to let truth get in the way of their lies, like their butt buddy friends who post lies, lies and more lies about anybody who reveals the truth about this band of homosexual predators.

kind of SSTV contest althought the noise would likely drive everyone

it at the time?

Duh! You want what you want and disrespect eveyone who gets in your way.

Not answering your questions is not libel. Accusing another of rape or calling them a rapist is.

It is also dispicable. -You- are dispicable.

My lack??? You prove yourself uncivil almost every time you post.

Deal's off.

Steve is many things. I'd put "ass" as #1 on his list, followed by "liar" then "delusional," not necessarily in that order. Actually,
"liar" could be listed several times. I don't think there's enough bandwidth to complete the list, though.

He made an agreement to be civil and couldn't last even 24 hours.

Newcomers???

I passed my Novice exam in November 1986 and I'm still considered a newcomer by your OF buddies here. And you ask what might be wrong with the ARS? Hi, hi!

You're trolling again, right? That was at least an S7.

Nope, just reality. W2OY learned that lesson the hard way :))

I really don't care one way or the other about code - but most folks have no idea how much information can be passed via that keyer. In my day, I'd pass dang near as much info in a given time as a teletype. Assuming, of course, the teletype operator could type that fast or was using an automatic send/receive teletype (with tape reader where the tape could be typed in advance of sending it).

A lot of folks can't even type 40 or 50 words per minute.

Absolute nonsense. Why get on GMRS where there is so much more on 440 MHz (like repeaters - including fast-scan amateur television repeaters). It appears that cb types get labeled "hams" and cause grief for the amateur community.

Didn't take you long to reply. Who's ingesting alcohol? I've to go to work tomorrow morning (like 5:00 AM). What is your excuse?

I've put perfect copy on paper using a manual typewriter at 40 words per minute. A number of minutes' worth. My mention of 40 or 50 words per minute was a reference to some of the wonder boys whose great exploits simply consist of 'cut and paste' on the Internet.

I'm simply saying that a good operator can likely keep up with most folks that are trying to enter original content and not simply pass along a digital picture, or a 'cut-and-paste' from someone else.

Then again, original content might be something you aren't familiar with.

With due regard,
Jim AA2QA

Then you have no concept of "standard." It matters not what others are doing if you hold a certain standard. And from your history it is obvious that you hold no standard.

David and Jim can apologize to me at any time. They certainly don't need you acting as "thier" ambasador.

The only thing that you're holding is a record number of false accusations.

Yet Mark is correct? So telling a truth causes Steve to label one a liar.

"raped an old friend" I'd say the Tennessee Nursing Board deserves to see that one.

Steve is judge, jury, and executioner. Anyone who transgresses against Steve's model of a "standard" must be harrassed into submission as they are getting exactly what they deserve.

Sheesh.

You can't even ask a civil question.

You're assinine, and my name is no embarassment.

"Brian" or "bb" is good enough.

Indeed. You couldn't even abide by your own words.

No dice. You must be civil to e-v-e-r-y-o-n-e here. If you cannot handle being civil to certain individuals, DO NOT ADDRESS THEM!

Would that be in 1951 (when the Extra as we know it was created) or some other time like the 1960s?

Who, exactly, are you talking about, Len? Who are the "older timers"
and the "NAAR lobbyists?"

You seem to be saying that back about 1951 the ARRL lobbied for the creation of the Extra, with its 20 wpm code test. Is that what you meant?

Only if they passed the Extra written, as has already been pointed out. But that's a different issue.

the State should sadly they likely will take the burden since he can it does show how warped his mind is he thinks you and BB should and CAN

I admit I was suckered into responding. Kind of like Hans with a 2005 service in 1974.

Correction. Steve >>>THINKS<<< he has bluffed....

He has the mentality of an idiot. Thinks all others are idiots.

Definitely sumptin wrong. You presented it as if it were applicable to

Why did you do that?

Can you also have your MAJOR Son-in-Law make the 2005 pay scales applicable to 1974???

To the contrary, I find 20 meters prime spectrum of interesting hams. Taking a break from business, I had the pleasure of talking all day on 20, only a minor part about the K1MAN story.

I'm glad you raised 20, because Glenn has weighed in within this thread on the subject, decrying its decay.. Contrary to his view, I find 20 meters upbeat. Quite a change from a short time ago when Riley came on board. Respect has replaced disrespect, a decent atmosphere has replaced one which was polluted (now the kids can listen), contesters are as avid as ever, friendly nets are ordinary operations, and hams, for the most part, act courteously toward one another.

In my view, 20 has undergone a sea shift for the better. Diatribes? If that is the way you wish to characterize this type of communication, be my guest.

Not at all, Brian. It's about getting newcomers involved in on-the-air activities of any mode.

In fact specifically points out that in 10,000 QSOs, newcomers (at least to this contest) are most likely to be voice operators by a ratio of over 3:1.

Then it points out what I consider to be a scary wakeup call --- that newcomer activity in both modes seems to have fallen by half in just a short 5-year period.

Finally it asks what we (all of us) can do to turn the ship around.

SSTV doesn't have a large pool of users. I wonder if you could interest enough of them to have a "critical mass" of participants. On the other hand, maybe having a contest would interest others in the mode. I like your idea of using "image quality" as a multiplier or "weighting factor" perhaps.

SSTV is one of my favorite modes and was my introduction to many of the hams around here

when we were shoping I would fill my digial cam in the flied and send a bunch of the pic back to a waiting set up in my hotel room,(to make some room for more) did drive a couple of the local a bit nuts listening to them as they monitored the repeater, but one of the interfaced for it and lo another SSTV was made other installed mute funtions to the stations (one interfed to a smal stereo with a remote that inculded Mute functions he and I are geting along even if he thinks me a bit strange

To the contrary, I find 20 meters prime spectrum of interesting hams.
Taking a break from business, I had the pleasure of talking all day on 20, only a minor part about the K1MAN story.

At the risk, "Preacher", of being characterized as being one of the uninteresting Hams on 20 meters, may I?
Yes, you often do talk "all day on 20". And you talk, and you talk, and you talk. At the end of the day, Bob, you have spent hours talking, and in the process you actually say little.

Yes, previous posters are, in the vernacular, 'right on the money' when they comment that many of them have made it a habit to spin their VFO to another frequency when you arrive on scene. Why do you suppose this is, Bob?
Obviously what you have to say/bloviate is of little to no importance to the majority of Hams within earshot of you, but that hardly gave you reason to pause, did it? You blab on, undeterred, and are somehow convinced that you are offering something of interest and value.

And, Bob? Please DO try to be just a tad bit less verbose. I realize that you fancy yourself as a wordsmith, but try, at least, to keep your vocabulary within the context of what it is you are attempting to convey.
You are, for the most part, not dazzling any of us with your attempts at brilliance.
In my view, 20 has undergone a sea shift for the better. Diatribes?
If that is the way you wish to characterize this type of communication,
be my guest.

Bob Sherin, W4ASX

Yes, Bob. In your view I am sure it has. Meanwhile, Bob, many of us will continue to do as we have been doing when we hear you on 20M. Turn you off.

Todd, here's a REAL challenge for you.

Whip out your OWN "..pansy ### license (for) CB..." and write "CANCEL" on it in big, black letters.

Mail it to the Federal Communications Commission in Gettysburg.

The YOU won't BE one of those "...pansy ### 'es...", and I'll be REALLY impressed with your demonstration of your convictions.

You can even go back and re-test your license and I'll pay to get N9OGL back for you.

But until then, you're the Queen Pansy ### Herself.

Obviously the security of the site wasn't that big a secret to someone who knows how to check, so what's your beef?

But your site violates the Terms and Conditions of your provider in that you are providing a site for the distribution of obscene material as it pertains to the representation of children participating in sex acts. So who cares a rat's kazoo about broadcasting your security issues?

Hey Brian...Why are you manufacturing yet another bit of deceit?

Hans has roasted me rather thoroughly on occassions...Sometimes rightfully so, others not to...

Jim doesn't mid at all going toe-to-toe with me when he feels he's

That was several years ago in Illinois...Markie had one of the neighborhood kids coming in and doing his typing for him (his hillarious "typist pool")

Markie now lives in the Upper Penninsula of Michigan. I am sure the neighborhood there is much smaller and it's harder for a "man" of Markie's preferences to "function" without drawing the attention of the neighbors, ergo harder to get one of the kids to enter the house without parental oversight.

I am sure there are a LOT of floppies in your life, Frankie, your Marine Corps "career" among them.

Until then, you have yet to even come close to a "point" other than making stuff up.

Perhaps you should consider a career in writing children's tales?
You've already demonstrated a talent for fiction. Just finding an appropriate target audience may be a bit challenging for you, though.

Nope.

Your buddy Frankie is LYING to you, Markie, as he is everyone else
he want's to have believe his tales!

Frank Gilliland has already been proven (by his own admission) to have been a "####bird PFC". In other words he was deadweight while he WAS in the Corps, and his inability to keep a clean nose for just ONE tour is proof of that.

I've further busted him on numerous details HE should have known about.

Yep.

Did it right there in the paragraph you "snipped", yet followed up with a comment, Markie.

Frankie insisted that the Marines DON'T have Military Police...Just "Shore Patrol", yet the USMC has a whole MOS Occupational Field dedicted to it.

Nope.

You'd PREFER that it be discardable, however the truth is that if you followed up on it, you'd have nothing to rant and rave about.

Starting off with verifying my previous MARS calls and participation.

However I guess you figure that there's SOME way that I managed to "corrupt" those resources? All THREE headquarters for MARS programs?

I've used YOU as a comparison. I just pointed out Dick's old call

2307. slap illegal keyclowns legally

HOW TO SLAP SISSY KEYCLOWNS IN THE WALLET WHEN THEY TRY SELLING THEIR ILLEGAL GARBAGE ON EBAY!

Log into ebay as you normally would and get ready to browse for illegal keyclown items! Keep the illegal keyclown equipment auction numbers you find in a text file.

Open a second browser and log on again. This time, use it to do the following:

Surf on over to http://pages.ebay.com/securitycenter/index.html
1. select "Report another problem"
2. click "Report problem"

This will take you to a page with 3 windows:
1. In the top window, select:"report a listing policy violation or prohibited (banned) item"
2. In middle window, select "Prohibited (banned) items"
3. In bottom window, select "electronics"
4. click "continue"

Now you will be on the "Contact us" page. Click on "email".

This will take you to a page to email Ebay security about the illegal keyclown equipment you find.
1. Type in the number of the auction that you want to rat out. You can type in up to 10 auctions, so cruise around your favorite place on Ebay to find illegal keyclown equipment and fill the box up! Type in the numbers like this: 000000000,00000001,000000002, etc. No gaps between the commas and the next number.
2. Before hitting the "send" button, make sure to copy/paste your ratouts to a text file. You want to save them so you can post them in the rec.radio.cb newsgroup. This is a public service to the legal CB'ers, who want all this keyclown gear eradicated. It also has a great side effect of getting keyclowns to squeal, call you names, and otherwise complain. They hate it when they get their clocks cleaned like this.
3. Now, you are ready to do your duty as a ham or a CB'er, and show that you are not a keyclown operator like they are. Click "send"!

Repeat as many times for as many days as you want, keep those keyclowns whining like the sissies they are!

Happy Anti-Keyclowning!

PS: Below are some recently ratted out ebay auctions. Rat them out again! There is strength in numbers, and the more people ratting them out the more they may just get off their butts and do something!

So with your "argument".

I am sorry.

Was there a point here?

Is there some evidence of a licensed Amateur trying to inappropriately influence the actions of the Commission? Or was that just a feigned pass...?!?!

Some facts, please?

Dick Bash disagreed with the federal government.

He violated federal law in the process. He should have gone to prison a long time ago.

This was a point? And relevent to the FACT that one of the "professional" jopurnals that Lennie claims doesn't discuss Amateur Radio DOES not only DISUCSS it, but lauds it?

And Markie, you can TRY to "deal out" what ever you care to do...It

No...YOU put out information where you can be "hit".

And I STILL don't see where ANY comments made by Lennie, Dave, Jim, or ANYone has any relevence to your rantings, Markie.

The problem, Markie, is that "higher and higher tech" is EXACTLY
why they have problems that DO need us!

The current circumstances in southern Louisiana are clear proof.
Once again the cellphone net, trunked and interlinked Public Service communications systems CRASHED under the weight of Katrina.

OK.

There is no way that any one state can truly "gear up" for the kind of disaster response that Katrina and Rita mandated...Not even California with it's sixth or eighth place GNP could withstand this kind of impact without calling in federal assistance.

Amateur Radio's BIGGEST contribution in this scenario is it's decentralized locating of assets. With thousands of licessees and stations spead out over the entire nation, there's no way that anything short of complete nuclear annihalation, pandemic disease or apoctolyptic act of God could obliterate it.

Ebay is but a tiny drop of the illegal/foreign equipment trade.
The majority of illegal equipment is bought/sold/traded at hamfest boneyards (yes, ham boneyards), flea markets, and over the air. Also, many legit storefronts deal in illegal equipment, if you know how to ask for it. I would say more, but I

Blah, Blah,

Turn me off; that is surely your prerogative. Based upon my results, though, for every individual exercising your type of disgression, there are hundreds who call, talk and befriend. My cup runneth over.

Now the latest on K1MAN as of November 23, 2005

K1MAN email to Riley Hollingsworth, Esq, FCC of November 22, 2005

"you QSYed to 14.313 so as to wipe out everyone up there! You were in clear violation of FCC rules by using more power than required to maintain your amateur radio communications, and you deserve a $22,000 NAL!"

Last night, troubled by the K1MAN email to the FCC, I mulled it. And what I came up with is dispositive of K1MAN's final disposition. Not one to readily use the word lie, meaning misrepresentation with scienter, I'm compelled to write that K1MAN's intention yesterday was to deceive the FCC.

Here's why. "you QSYed (changed frequency) so as to wipe out everyone up there!" Here K1MAN arrogates unto himself knowledge of intentional interference and charges that I went on 14.313 to "wipe out everyone up there." Nothing could be further from the truth. I made one transmission there: "Is this frequency occupied?" When the answer was affirmative, I moved.

By making a false charge and failing to produce the mitigating or exculpatory information of what, in fact, happened, K1MAN, who holds himself out as a ham radio leader, maliciously misleads our regulator, the FCC. Where a good part of ham radio is voluntary compliance and cooperation in the resolution of problems, K1MAN does not possess the moral character to be part of this colossus..

If this were his only transgression, a fair minded person might be prone to let it slide with a slap on the wrist. However, the on-air course of his performance shows that his conduct here is but a minor part thereof.

Please make this part of the K1MAN record at the FCC.

To the contrary, I find 20 meters prime spectrum of interesting hams.
Taking a break from business, I had the pleasure of talking all day on 20, only a minor part about the K1MAN story.

At the risk, "Preacher", of being characterized as being one of the uninteresting Hams on 20 meters, may I?
Yes, you often do talk "all day on 20". And you talk, and you talk, and you talk. At the end of the day, Bob, you have spent hours talking, and in the
process you actually say little.

Yes, previous posters are, in the vernacular, 'right on the money' when they comment that many of them have made it a habit to spin their VFO to another frequency when you arrive on scene. Why do you suppose this is, Bob?
Obviously what you have to say/bloviate is of little to no importance to the majority of Hams within earshot of you, but that hardly gave you reason
to pause, did it? You blab on, undeterred, and are somehow convinced that you
are offering something of interest and value.

And, Bob? Please DO try to be just a tad bit less verbose. I realize
that
you fancy yourself as a wordsmith, but try, at least, to keep your vocabulary within the context of what it is you are attempting to convey.
You are, for the most part, not dazzling any of us with your attempts at brilliance.
In my view, 20 has undergone a sea shift for the better. Diatribes?
If that is the way you wish to characterize this type of communication,

be my guest.

Yes, Bob. In your view I am sure it has. Meanwhile, Bob, many of us will continue to do as we have been doing when we hear you on 20M. Turn you off.

W4ASX Replies 11/23/2005

Blah Blah Blah,

Thank you for your post. I especially appreciate it because your points and position, well expressed, are clear.

Pluralism, the concept essentially of "different strokes for different folks" is the responsive topical sentence. For sure, the realization is there that not everyone is interested in the subject-matter of my posts. Also, that writing, as an art form, is challenging. What turns me on is to sink my teeth into a story of which I have unique knowlege and try to reach an audience with that knowledge who come away entertained and better informed.

Well understood is the difficulty of word-smithing. For our language is so very rich when wielded to its full extent. All words have semantical frameworks, so the choice is exacting. Does my effort to write mean I'm a great writer? No. Ever since trying to go beyond myself in writing 30 years ago, I've struggled to improve, marvelling at those successful people whose text leaps off the page.

Notwithstanding, I think through my posts, spend time editing, read responses with arespect, then try to participate, changing according to the input coming back.

If you put my call and name into a newsgroup search, you'd be surprised with the results. This isn't the only place nor subject on which I post. I've posted in groups on religion and law as well. I'm also a published author in publications too numerous to list here, but here are some: The Miami Herald, The Miami News, Computer World, Datamation, the Westside Gazette, Florida Skip, South Florida Business Journal.

I was paid for some of the articles. So to tell me, I'm not read is clearly false. I know I'm read from your responsive posts, calls, emails, and knowledge people often show who communicate with me. You can also read it on the Net: One ham posted (about the KV4FZ story): to understand the KV4FZ story, "see Bob Sherin, W4ASX's work."

More, to critcize operation on ham radio is self defeating. If we need anything, we need to get the hams out and on the air, whether it be code, rag chewing or contests. To characterize my operation on ham radio is a waste of time in the face of my disclosure that I'm up to my ears in business and use this collosssus for relaxation, is a misrepresentation. The fact is, I'm not on much of the time when I'm on the road doing gigs.

Whatever your opinions, fellow hams, have a happy holiday, at a time when I have 3 gigs scheduled, moving my 85 pound Peavy speakers and sound systems around. You enjoy while I work.

Bob Sherin, W4ASX

A fantastic tale in its day but back to present day what is the benefit? I think you will find most people will know you can say anything via Morse just like you can talking so being amazed at what can be passed via Morse seems a strange thing to highlight. You can pass much more information by talking. In the past fair enough but times have moved on. Morse is now an out-dated form of communication practised now by just radio Amateurs.
To any Amateurs who like Morse then that's fine for them. They will learn it and use it where they like and I have no problems at all about that. But... to ramble on about it constantly and belittle anyone not really interested in "just the Morse" side of radio is a bit unfair branding them as inferior radio users (not aimed at you personally here) Amateur radio can still be a fascinating Hobby without it, or as I would like, not a forced issue but one of choice.

If that is adiquate then whats wrong with cut and paste? Only an idiot would sit there re-typing out something that could just as easily be cut and pasted unless it was an original work of course.

A good operator? Depends on your impression of a good operator. A good operator to me is someone who uses the radio sensibly, stays legal and cares about interference and deals with it if caused. Someone who goes on about ooh i can do this or i can do that trying to put themselves above other operators in my opinion have a vanity problem. As far as pictures go id rather use the internet as its a more appropriate media for that.

True again, but Dud doesn't live in reality, he lives in Dudworld where fantasy and self-promotion override logic and reality.

I disagree. Dudly lives in a fantasy of his own mind. He just doesn't understand that the rest of us live in reality.

>He has the mentality of an idiot. Thinks all others are idiots.

In a fantasy "mentality" is defined solely by the beliefs of the individual. Dudly may very well Believe that he is "smart" because of that Belief in his fantasy.

>Look at his use of the concept of "standard."

That's part of the Dudworld fantasy. It may be "standard" there but it doesn't apply to reality. Dud wants to make all conform to his fantasy where he is the "standard" by which all others are measured.

In Dudworld the "facts" are what Dudly fantasizes they are.
Naturally such "facts" fit what Dud thinks they should be.

>"Coward and Liar..."
>
>His first most used phrase.

Another manifestation of Dud's fantasy and the imaginary Dudworld "standard" and "facts." Dud is highly frustrated that he cannot meet the real standards of reality in everything, so his frustration causes him to call his opponents for "cowards" and "liars."

It's a very black-and-white set of absolutes in Dudworld fantasy. Agree with Dudly and all are true, honest, brave.
Disagree with Dudly and all are cowards and liars. Simple.
Unreal.

>"raped an old friend" is a recent invention of Tennessee Nurse, Steven Dudly is probably sexually frustrated as well. He has frequently brought up comments of a sexual nature along with charges of sexual deviancy or inadequacy among his opponents when sexuality was not a topic of a thread.

Dudly imagines himself a great actor as well...acting out parts of his fantasy in trying to communicate with those of us in the world of reality

Hmmm...not a brand I recognize in this corner of the USA. The personally prefer the "Hidden Valley" brand for Ranch dressing.

Thread Readers,

Please be aware that the pseudonyms above may likely be one person, a K1MAN supporter, who, unable to meet the subject-matter, is attempting to undermine and detract from the posts. When a pseudonym is pitted against a real person, a ham, with a real name, the discussion is biased, because while the unidentifed knows about the reality of the opposing poster, the identified poster doesn't have a provable clue nor can he assume with whom he is debating.

Permit me, for a moment, to point out how this relates to the above post about 75 meter operations. Though I haven't been down there in years, there was a time when I was very much into 75 meters, primarily because, like many others, it gave me an opportunity to design, build and test low band antennas.

To be honest, I never felt comfortable on 75 meters, nor did I feel that I fit in for the most part. There were groups, however, in which I enjoyed participating, like the Knights of the Round Table. The above poster knows all this, so taking advantage of his knowledge, he delivers a cheap shot. And because he remains incognito, there can be no impeachable dialogue back.

This is why anonymous posts sully real reporting on these Newsgroups. They can impart a wholly false impression -- of many against one when the many is actually only one, of innuendo when the issue raised by the poster cannot be related to the poster's actual behavior, or wholly fabricated information designed to discredit is disseminated behind a mask of anonymity.

I ask only readers that you ponder the subject-matter of this thread and not the tangential calumny, invective, rumor and half baked truths. This is an important story to ham radio, one in which I've been joined and outdone by the masterful and all-encompassing research of K3VR, Brian.

That may have been the topic in the cozy lodge or it may have been your tiny, old, dusty Johnson. That Anderson Powerpole bit may be a bit of self-aggrandizement on your part.

Math and science were two different subjects in my high school. Let's see...

In math:

9th grade: Algebra 1
10th grade: Geometry
11th grade: Algebra 2 and Trigonometry
12th grade: AP Calculus

In science:

9th grade: Introductory Physics
10th grade: Chemistry
11th grade: Biology
12th grade: AP Physics

Never brought home any "D" marks so I don't know what would have happened.

I suspect that if I had, there would have been no ham radio until the marks improved.
Of course I had a built-in advantage because I'd learned a lot of math and science for ham radio before I ever got to high school. I earned the Advanced in the summer between 8th and 9th grade, you see.

And FCC did nothing about it. Some in the FCC wanted to prosecute, but the higher ups didn't allow it. Phil Kane has told about it first-hand - he was working in the office where Bash did his thing at the time.

Whether Bash broke the letter of the law or not isn't clear, but it is clear that he broke the spirit of the law. If, back then, FCC had thought it was OK for people to see the actual exams, they would have been published (as they are now) rather than going through the additional work of making up study guides.

Hello, Graham

I also do not see the need to force cw on anyone. Still, when one attempts to tell me that more information can be passed via voice, I can only agree if the communications is something like "meet me at Joe's bar at 10:00 PM".

If there is something like "medium pizza with cheeze and sausage to 1235 W. Cauncy Blvd", then someone is going to have to write down that information. This will slow the maximum data transfer to what can be put on paper. Assuming one is not connected to the Internet where they can simply print the information, I must admit that I cannot print nor write as fast as I can copy cw to a keyboard (or typewriter). In that case, cw might be as efficient as anything else. This is, of course, a questionable case.

The time I mentioned (the perfect copy at 40) was a weather bulletin which gave latitude, longitude, and a multitude of other data to boot. This could, of course, be transmitted by voice, but would absolutely have to be put on paper (unless someone had a photographic memory that never made a mistake). In that case, sans digital data transmission (citor, amtor, teletype, or whatever), voice could not possibly be faster as it had to be put to paper.

In this case, the limit would be how fast this could be transcribed to paper.

In closing, I would reiterate that I agree about cw should not be a forced issue. My only issue is that some folks feel that it is terribly slow. Compared to the Internet or other digital transmissions, sure. Compared to voice .... it all depends ;)

The problem, Markie, is that "higher and higher tech" is EXACTLY
why they have problems that DO need us!

The current circumstances in southern Louisiana are clear proof.
Once again the cellphone net, trunked and interlinked Public Service
communications systems CRASHED under the weight of Katrina.

Oh yeah...Our ego's got in the way...yeah. Right. Uh huh. Sure.

OK.

There is no way that any one state can truly "gear up" for the kind of disaster response that Katrina and Rita mandated...Not even California with it's sixth or eighth place GNP could withstand this kind of impact without calling in federal assistance.

Amateur Radio's BIGGEST contribution in this scenario is it's decentralized locating of assets. With thousands of licessees and stations spead out over the entire nation, there's no way that anything

short of complete nuclear annihalation, pandemic disease or apoctolyptic act of God could obliterate it.

There was not a SINGL:E WORD in the above exchanges, Markie, yet
YOU keep bringing YOUR deviant lifestyle into the thread...then you

That was several years ago in Illinois...Markie had one of the neighborhood kids coming in and doing his typing for him (his hillarious "typist pool")

Markie now lives in the Upper Penninsula of Michigan. I am sure the neighborhood there is much smaller and it's harder for a "man" of Markie's preferences to "function" without drawing the attention of the neighbors, ergo harder to get one of the kids to enter the house without parental oversight.

I'm not offended. I just don't beleive that the FCC, or even Ofcom for that matter, give a hoot about the citizenship of people that post comments.

It's set by Congress and interpreted by the courts. The former have to be citizens, as do those who elect them. I doubt if judges do, though. Lawyers certainly don't. It also applies to everyone in the US and has affects on people even outside the US, like Kenwood and Yaesu for example. The phrase for all these people is 'interested parties' and that's who the FCC is looking for comments from, even non-hams!

No, there's absolutley nothing wrong for "the lower ranks".

I exhibited NOT ONE IOTA of disrespect based upon "rank".

My "disrespect" is for a lying, deceitful, can't carry himself honorably for ONE enlistment punk.

And that's something you're -proud- to admit? Think about it for a sec, Dud..... do you really think that a shitbird PFC, after going through two courts-martial and spending time in the brig, doesn't know that the Marine Corps doesn't have MP's? Gawd you are dumb. I guess I only have posted it, you would be trying to shove it down my throat at every opportunity -- just like you are doing with the MP/SP issue.

But go right ahead and rejoice in your imaginary victory, Major Dud.

Let's see if you are still unwilling to address the issues.......

You didn't know that avionics techs (your alleged MOS) are regularly deployed with the FMF.

You didn't know about the VINSON system. To wit: "I know who Col Vinson was and I know where Ft Gordon is. Never served with him/for him/within 100 miles of him." Neither did you know that the VINSON system replaced almost all outdated crypto systems in the late '70's, including the old punch-pin monsters (KY-28/38 of the NESTOR system, which had been almost completely replaced by the VINSON system by the early '80's).

You didn't know the difference between a 'hitch', a 'cruise', and a 'float'.

You mistakenly assumed the origination of the phrase "One Shot One Kill" was from the Army Sniper School; wrongfully presumed that it is a tactic taught to all Marine recruits; then proceeded to demonstrate your ignorance about basic combat tactics, the use of shotguns, and the very common 40mm grenade launchers (M-79 & M-203).

You claimed that "the only targets used to train Marine riflemen (and all recruits) [are] head shots and 'center mast', or chest shots", but didn't know that the standard round marksmanship-type targets are also used, and much more often than "dog" targets. In fact, most of rifle qualification is done with the round targets. But you didn't know that despite your claim to have "[taken] home an 'Rifle Expert' on each and every trip to the range".

You didn't know that only the results of an Article 15 proceeding are recorded, not the entire proceedings; and you don't even know what page in the SRB they are recorded.

You didn't know that Marines are often prohibited from taking any off-duty employment, nor did you know that such a decision is usually made by the CO, not HQMC.

You didn't know that outside communications can be prohibited during a base lock-down or unit activation.

You defined a 'chit' as "A Naval term for a 'permission slip'", when in fact it means -any- piece of paper with something written on it.

You didn't know that a dishonorable discharge can only be given as a result of a conviction in a General court-martial, and is usually given after a few years at Leavenworth and a reduction to Private.

You didn't know that the Corps doesn't use cutting scores for promotions.

You misquoted your SIX alleged promotion certificates (a misquote that I later found on google verbatim).

You didn't understand that "years and months in specialty" (box 11 on the DD-214) is not the same as time in service, yet claimed that you have -several- DD-214's.

You claimed that time on the delayed entry program was considered to be time in reserve status but never was.

You stated that "My DD-214 says 'Honorable'...", yet after 1979 there is no box on the form to designate character of service. The DD-214 is only a "release or discharge from active duty", not a final discharge certificate. Only that latter will denote the character of service.

You claimed to have served from 03 September, 1974 to 29 May, 1992. That's only 17 years and 9 months. Yet you also claim to be retired, which can only happen if you served 20 years. You also claimed to have been discharged for medical reasons, having your discharge later upgraded (a claim which you have both denied and acknowledged). You didn't know that medical discharges cannot be upgraded, nor that time not served cannot be arbitrarily added to the end of an enlistment in order to obtain retirement benefits.

And once again: With all your careers, activities and obligations, where do you find the time to post as much as you do on Usenet?

Well?

Address the issues, Dud:

You didn't know that avionics techs (your alleged MOS) are regularly deployed with the FMF.

You didn't know about the VINSON system. To wit: "I know who Col Vinson was and I know where Ft Gordon is. Never served with him/for him/within 100 miles of him." Neither did you know that the VINSON system replaced almost all outdated crypto systems in the late '70's, including the old punch-pin monsters (KY-28/38 of the NESTOR system, which had been almost completely replaced by the VINSON system by the early '80's).

You didn't know the difference between a 'hitch', a 'cruise', and a 'float'.

You mistakenly assumed the origination of the phrase "One Shot One Kill" was from the Army Sniper School; wrongfully presumed that it is a tactic taught to all Marine recruits; then proceeded to demonstrate your ignorance about basic combat tactics, the use of shotguns, and the very common 40mm grenade launchers (M-79 & M-203).

You claimed that "the only targets used to train Marine riflemen (and all recruits) [are] head shots and 'center mast', or chest shots", but didn't know that the standard round marksmanship-type targets are also used, and much more often than "dog" targets. In fact, most of rifle qualification is done with the round targets. But you didn't know that despite your claim to have "[taken] home an 'Rifle Expert' on each and every trip to the range".

You didn't know that only the results of an Article 15 proceeding are recorded, not the entire proceedings; and you don't even know what page in the SRB they are recorded.

You didn't know that Marines are often prohibited from taking any off-duty employment, nor did you know that such a decision is usually made by the CO, not HQMC.

You didn't know that outside communications can be prohibited during a base lock-down or unit activation.

You defined a 'chit' as "A Naval term for a 'permission slip'", when in fact it means -any- piece of paper with something written on it.

You didn't know that a dishonorable discharge can only be given as a result of a conviction in a General court-martial, and is usually given after a few years at Leavenworth and a reduction to Private.

You didn't know that the Corps doesn't use cutting scores for promotions.

You misquoted your SIX alleged promotion certificates (a misquote that I later found on google verbatim).

You didn't understand that "years and months in specialty" (box 11 on the DD-214) is not the same as time in service, yet claimed that you have -several- DD-214's.

You claimed that time on the delayed entry program was considered to be time in reserve status but never was.

You stated that "My DD-214 says 'Honorable'...", yet after 1979 there is no box on the form to designate character of service. The DD-214 is only a "release or discharge from active duty", not a final discharge certificate. Only that latter will denote the character of service.

You claimed to have served from 03 September, 1974 to 29 May, 1992. That's only 17 years and 9 months. Yet you also claim to be retired, which can only happen if you served 20 years. You also claimed to have been discharged for medical reasons, having your discharge later upgraded (a claim which you have both denied and acknowledged). You didn't know that medical discharges cannot be upgraded, nor that time not served cannot be arbitrarily added to the end of an enlistment in order to obtain retirement benefits.

And with all your careers, activities and obligations, where do you find the time to post as much as you do on Usenet?

Anyone remember the Astro-Net on 3885 kc from the 1960s? It was composed of group of amateur astronomers who nightly trained their telescopes on a particular celestial object and would then have round-table comments about that object. It was fascinating to eavesdrop on that net.

Frankie, PERHAPS if you had learned early in your life how to prioritize your activities and your daily obligations-vs-preferences, you MIGHT have found time to be the Marine you now fancy yourself as having been.

Instead, you wound up as an also-ran trying to salve his bruised ego at the expense of someone who DID learn how to do those things.

I pity you, really...

I managed to be able to do the things I want.

You never managed to do the things you need to.

I understand "the issues" just fine, Frankie.

You made the stupid comments and I bloodied your nose with them.

You've tripped yourself up SEVERAL times now trying to salve your ego and "make fun" of me, only to get it fed back to you.

You were useless when you were in the Corps, you're even less than useless now.

The ONLY thing you've gotten right so far was categorizing yourself as a ####bird.

JULIETT in helos. OV-10's, too.

As of early 1992 the KY-58's had not been installed in the -53 series helos.

Nice try, though.

You're the one with knowledge deficit, Frankie.

them.

No mistake.

One shot, one kill.

I am willing to bet it's that deceitful mouth that got you busted.

SURE they do! W H Y do you keep lying about this, Frankie?

I missed one word, Frankie...

So two points here...

First of all, by your own words YOU had to go find it on Google yourself. And since the last time I stood infront of someone to hear those words recited to me was 1988, I think one word is pretty acceptable.

Secondly, when was YOUR last promotion, and how many of them DID you manage to get?

Mine does.

Like I said, Frankie...It's a shame you didn't learn how to skills...

You might have BEEN the Marine you fancy yourself as being now....

You never would have asked that question if you had been in the Corps because every Marine knows that FMF units are assembled from parts of units that cover almost the entire spectrum of the Corps capabilities.
For example, when I was with 3/8 we were deployed as BLT (Batallion Landing Team) 3/8, the infantry unit that was attached to the 24th MAU for that float. The 24th MAU also consisted of components from tanks, amtracks, artillery, etc, etc. The BLT that was attached to the 24th MAU just prior to my deployment was BLT 1/8, on an expedition that should strike a chord if you know your Marine Corps history.

The KY-58's were installed in aircraft in the early '80 so as to be compatible with the ground forces which had already replaced the KY-38's with the KY-57's. And since air and ground forces -must- be able to talk to each other in order to function, the aircraft -must-have had KY-58's. I also know this firsthand since I regularly rode the CH-46 and CH-53 (first trip on a CH-53 was from Lejeune to Bragg for urban combat training -- a long and bumpy trip; and with those really small portholes for no visual reference..... well, let's just say that the first canteen I emptied was to clean out my steel pot). I also had to load some keys onto aircraft KY-58's while on float (part of the job). They were there, Dud. You weren't.

I didn't see any URL's. But if you want a definitive reference, why don't you just take a look in the Marine Corps Manual (i.e, the green one, although I'm sure the red one has the same info).

You said, "the ONLY targets used" (emphasis added). Your statement was wrong. I can post pics of the rifle range from my boot-camp 'yearbook' if you need further proof. And your claim is even more wrong for the simple fact that human bodies are not the only targets in warfare.
Recruits are taught marksmanship, not just "head shots", and not "one shot one kill".

Contrary to your original claim, no transcripts are made during an Article 15 hearing. Only the results are recorded. And every Marine, NJP or not, knows on which page of the SRB those results are recorded.
It's common knowledge in the Corps because it's discussed frequently.
The only way you wouldn't know this bit of info is if you were never in the Corps. Maybe Hans can help you out here.....

Wrong. You -begged- me to cite an MCO that prohibits such activities, yet after I educated you on the issue you claimed that your CO granted you permission to work as an EMT. You have been caught making up your 'career' as you go, Dud.

>> You didn't know that outside communications can be prohibited during a Wrong again, Dud. When confronted with the scenario about not being able to make your shift as an EMT due to base lockdown or unit activation, you made the ignorant excuse that you could simply give them a phone call, which often times is -not- possible because of restricted outside communications during such situations. Again, you were caught improvising your imaginary 'career'.

Wrong. I openly admitted that my initial discharge was a 'General under Honorable Conditions', yet you proclaimed in several posts that I received a "dishonorable" discharge. That was a demonstration of gross ignorance on your part, since the types of discharges are pounded into your head during boot camp. And they are never forgotten because Marines read about others getting such discharges all the time..... or are you now going to claim that you never read the same periodical that published those alleged stories about active duty Marines working as EMT's? Anyway, what you didn't know (because you were never a Marine) was that a "dishonorable" discharge is a specific type of discharge -- the worst, actually. It's -not- a term that is generally applied to any discharge that is less than honorable. You ignorantly referred to my discharge as "dishonorable", proving that you didn't know the types of discharges (which was apparent from the beginning since you didn't know the difference between a 'medical' and an 'honorable', neither of which you received).

>> You didn't know that the Corps doesn't use cutting scores for Marine Corps Manual. Marines -pride- themselves on having a promotion system that's based on merit, not on cutting scores as used by the other military services.

No, I just had to look at one of my five promotion certificates. I searched google to see if anyone had misquoted it in the same way you did. Someone did, which leads me to believe that your misquote was the result of a google search (or from some source other than your memory or your alleged promotion certificates).

> And since the last time I stood infront of someone to hear
>those words recited to me was 1988, I think one word is pretty

I was discharged three years earlier and promoted fewer times, yet I knew your quote was incorrect. Odd, wouldn't you say? And what did you do with all your paperwork from the Corps? Did it mean so little to you that you threw it all away?

> Secondly, when was YOUR last promotion, and how many of them DID >you manage to get?

My fifth and last promotion was 1 October 85, and authorized by Lt.Col. C. C. Riner III, CO of 2nd AAV. I can scan the promotion certificate if you like. And I was promoted five times in my four short years. So while I may refer to myself as a 'shitbird', I must have been doing -something- right!!!

>> You didn't understand that "years and months in specialty" (box 11 on

You skipped this one, Dud.

>> You claimed that time on the delayed entry program was considered to

> Sure it was.

I was on the delayed entry program myself. Signed the contract on Friday, Feb. 13, 1981 (yeah, pretty stupid). My total obligation was six years; four active and two inactive reserve. So if my time on delayed entry counted as reserve time then my final discharge would have been Feb. 13, 1987 (plus bad time). It wasn't. It was six years after my -actual- entry date (plus bad time, of course). Again, you are wrong.

>> You stated that "My DD-214 says 'Honorable'...", yet after 1979 there

You didn't read that very carefully, Dud. The DD-214 after 1979 DOESN'T STATE CHARACTER OF SERVICE. And if you really have "several"
DD-214's as you claimed, you would have replied with "mine do", not "mine does". Yet another discrepancy, Dud.

>> You claimed to have served from 03 September, 1974 to 29 May, 1992.

I was repeating -your- claims, Dud. If your claims are not factual then you lied... but that's pretty clear to just about everyone by now, no exceptions.

>> You didn't know that medical discharges cannot be upgraded, nor that time

If you call the fire department to put out a fire, but only -you- know that the fire doesn't exist, you can't blame them for responding.
You've had seven years to provide the facts. All you have provided are unsubstantiated and contradictory claims. Do you need -even more- time to fabricate plausible details of your military 'career'?

Yes, he did.

Maybe he did and maybe he didn't. He was never charged with anything for his publishing activities, let alone convicted. (Innocent until proven guilty, right?).

> He should have gone to prison a long time ago.

IMHO a fine and license revocation would have been more appropriate.

The fact is that FCC never went after him, despite folks like K2ASP wanting to do so, because the folks at the top said no. Seems to me there are several possible explanations for that lack of action:

1) Corruption (no evidence of that)

2) Incompetence (?)

3) Lack of hard evidence. IANAL, but IMHO the books themselves are not hard evidence; and Bash would not have had to testify against himself.
FCC would have had to get someone with firsthand evidence of what Bash was doing.

4) Unclear law. Bash didn't steal or copy the exams. He didn't ask others to do so. All he did was ask people questions and write down their answers. It could be argued that those who talked to Bash and accepted the money were breaking the law, not Bash himself.

And was it clearly spelled out to everyone who took an FCC exam that they were not to divulge the contents of that exam? Was it clearly spelled out in the regulations that the exams were to be kept secret and what the penalties were for making them public? If not, FCC might have lost a very embarrassing case had they gone after Bash.

5) Planning for the future. The folks at the top who did not allow prosecution of Bash might have already been thinking of going to public question pools when Bash did his thing. If so, it would have been a waste of time to prosecute him, because by the time they got a verdict, what he did would not have been an offense any more.

It's clear he violated the spirit of the old exam rules. But whether he violated the letter of those rules, and could have been convicted, will probably never be certain because he won't ever be charged or tried.

SNIP

No...

A Regimental Combat Team, BLT or MEU is "assembled" from those units, Frankie.

YOUR unit had NO avionics personnel in it.

How many Avionics Technicians were in YOUR GROUND UNIT, Frankie?

Better yet, how many AVIATION UNITS were YOU attached to?

And an overseas deployment is STILL refered to as a cruise and an enlsitment is STILL refered to as a "hitch", no matter what you try to amke from it, Frankie.

Don't you wish YOU were?

He was closer to being a Marine than you were, Frankie.

At least by the end of the movie, his character had learned something about honor.

You had four years and never did.

No, it was not.

Ahhhhhh yes...Just slightly less tacky than the average junior highschool "yearbook", pack full of "stock" boot camp pictures, interspersed with a few "activities" shots of out platoon, and rounded out with our "Dress Blues" shots...The ones where they have several white tops on a table along with the "coat" that was only the top half and had a snap in the back...

Of course when I went through, most of the "stock" pics were from the 60's...

Argue the semantics all you care to, Frankie.

Maybe.

But I sat in on many Office Hours. Records were kept, along with charges, statements, any mitigating evidence, and the disposition.

Maybe they were a bit slacker in the ground side...

Not wrong.

Marines MAY be prohibited from taking certain off-duty employment, and ARE prohibited from participating in criminal activities or partisan politics wherein their role as a Marine may be inferred as establishing a political preference.

Nope.

And you've STILL not quoted a Marine Corps order that prohibited
my working as an EMT.

Not one.

I was in the Marine Corps a heck of a lot longer than you, Frankie.

In those 18 years, not once was I prohibited from making "that call".

Again, pretty slim picking on YOUR part, and STILL proactive deceit from you...

A "chit" is not ANY peice of paper, Frankie.

It WAS dishonorable.

You lied. You cheated. You misbehaved.

And you got busted for it.

Twice.

That IS dishonorable.

I served over four times longer than you and didn't get a single Office Hours.

THAT is Honorable.

Or perhaps they didn't "pound" hard enough on you?

Uh huh...

And that MERIT is a composite of proficiency, performance and conduct.

Commonly called "cutting scores".

Five?

Was that one each up to Staff Sergeant?

Or a couple to the same rank over, which is more like it.

No...You weren't.

If anyone other than the Commandant of the Marine Corps
"authorized" a promotion, then it was to a rank less than Staff Sergeant.

That means you had to ride that ride twice at least once.

I only went up.

Too bad for you.

If you HAD "...been doing -something- right!!!..." You would have had all one way promotions...not ups-and-downs!

to BE a Marine.

Well, Frnakie, all I can say is that somewhere between 27 April 1974 and 13 February 1981 something changed.

I got credit for the delayed entry time.

Sorry you didn't.

No need to, Frankie.

You're already "outted" for the liar you are, Frankie.

You just didn't know when to shut your mouth when you got out, Frankie! It got you busted while you were in the Corps, it's proven you to be the liar and coward I call you now.

Sucks to be you.

If one knows music notation, it can be expressed even more simply by the ratio of note lengths. For example, a dotted eighth relative to a sixteenth note has the same lenghth ratio as a dash to a dot. Other notations with the same length ratios are dotted quarters versus eighths and dotted halves versus quarters. So the letter C could be any of the three following notations.

Dotted eighth, sixteenth, dotted eighth, sixteenth Dotted quarter, eighth, dotted quarter, eighth Dotted half, quarter, dotted half, quarter

The dotted half and quarter would be more representative than a straight half and quarter since the ratio of dot to dash length is 3 to 1 rather than 2 to one.

Or you could use straight quarters with triplet eighths as another approach to get the 3 to one ratio.

Jim, if I physically reach in to a persons wallet and take their money, that's theft.

Is it any LESS theft if I demand that they take it out and hand it to me?

Sure was when I tested, in Ohio, Atlanta and Long Beach, CA offices all three. My High School science teacher who administered my Novice read his part of the insructions which stated it was unlawful to divulge the contents of the test.

I just don't know how many ways you can say "Don't discuss the test", Jim!

If they HAD gone after him, at least it would have set case law...Or at the very least SHOULD have pushed the reg writers in Washington to "get hot".

The only thing that can be derive or concluded from that is the probable fact that there was disagreement within the FCC as to the ability to pursue and win any case against Bash.

I never met anyone convicted of breaking the spirit of any law. The other issue that would be in play is the legality of the law itself on constitutional grounds.

I really have no problem with an experience criteria
(e.g.a time interval between General and Extra).

Jim,

I agree with all your comments and analysis.
There was a time you clearly believed Bash broke the law, but you do seem to now recognize the many possibilities that are or were potentially in play back in the 60's. Nice write-up. You should keep this text handy for every time the Bash issue resurfaces in this newsgroup.
Heck, call it the FAQ on Bash :-) :-)

Of course it is theft because the person no longer has the money. If, on the other hand, you allow me to look in your wallet and I see you have 53 dollars, is it theft if I tell someone else I saw $53 dollars (one 20, three 10s and three ones).

This analogy is totally off the mark because it involves a physical removal which is NOT what Bash did.

The other legal question comes down to: is it legal to prohibit post test discussion.

He sees it differently. I agree that a lot of old timers will not like losing Morse Exam, probably for the reasons Len has cited.

But what if you were in the middle of preparing for another ham test with Bash (or its equivalent) study guides?

You had an advantage because you started your ham "career" in your youth while supported by your family. Others had an advantage because if they washed out of ditty bopper school in the military they became cooks and MPs.

It is plausible that some of them liked the idea of having a special ticket just for high and higher speed code operators with spectrum set-aside just for them. Some might even have found their way into the federal government, and even into the FCC and put the concept of Inventive Licensing into motion.

I wonder where all the Veteran ditty-boppers ended up?

The point is that you think Len was incapable of seeing an actual FCC exam or study material published by Bash or other Publishing Houses.

I've searched and cannot find it.

But just for a moment, let's disregard if you said it, if it is an exact quote, or out of context.

Is the Morse Code Exam a barrier to Morse Code use?

Prison costs money. Fines generate money.

Any one of those explains what happened, but #3 is the big one. Maybe FCC
tried to put a case together but couldn't come up with the hard evidence.

It's easy for laymen to play lawyer and say what should and should not happen.
But the legal folks in charge have to deal with the real world and how things may turn out. They usually have the experience and knowledge to know what is a viable case and what isn't.

If they don't want you to take it, yes, it is theft.
>
> Is it any LESS theft if I demand that they take it out and hand it > to me?

Nope. Theft by force or threat of force vs. theft by stealth doesn't matter
- it's still theft.

But the question arises as to who did the theft, if one actually occurred.
Bash did not steal exams. He did not sneak into FCC offices, etc. All he did was gather information and publish it. Whether that information was a protected secret of some kind isn't clear.

It could be argued that the real theft, if any occurred, was done by those who gave the info to Bash. Nobody had to talk to him. Nobody had to take his money. People could have said "I'm not allowed to tell you what's on the test" or "I don't remember".

For that matter, they could have been really sneaky and told him wrong information and taken his money anyway. Then his books would have been worse than useless.

But more than a few people talked to him, gave him the info he wanted, and took his money. That's as bad or worse than anything he did, IMHO.
Because without them, he could not have succeeded.

And that was when? Before or after Bash?

> divulge the contents of the test.

Ah, but that was a Novice test administered by a volunteer examiner,
not
an FCC office test!

In 1967, when I took the Novice at K3NYT's house, (Keystone Ave in Upper Darby, across from the 69th street terminal) the envelope that held the written exam was covered in specific instructions about how to administer the test and not to divulge anything. K3NYT wouldn't even look at it - he just opened the sealed envelope and gave me the papers, then when I was done put them all in the return envelope and sealed it up.

In those days you could get a Novice, Tech or Conditional by mail. So
it would have been a simple task for an unscrupulous person to make a copy of the written exams for those licenses. But Advanced and Extra were not
so easily obtained by mail.

> I just don't know how many ways you can say "Don't discuss the > test", Jim!

When I went to the FCC office in 1968 (Tech/Advanced), 1970 (Extra), and 1972 (Second 'Phone) I don't recall anybody saying anything about keeping mum about the test contents.

Or it could have gone the other way and set a precedent that the exams were not protected secrets at all, and killed any hope of FCC ever having secret exams again.

Agreed, but a moot point now. FCC isn't going back to secret tests in
the foreseeable future. Our main possibility is to make the pools so large that it would be easier to simply learn the material than to memorize the answers.

Anyone can submit questions to the QPC, so we have no complaint unless we've submitted a bunch.

btw, I'll add a few more:

6) Lack of resources. FCC was strapped for enforcement resources in the 1970s, due in large part to the cb mess, and going after Bash may have been judged to be not worth the cost.

7) Embarrassment about the tests. FCC really had only a few versions of each test. That was a big reason for the 30 day wait before retesting.
Going after Bash would have simply publicized that fact even more.

Jim, by discussing if Bash broke the letter of the law or the spirit of the law, you just answered your own question of "Where?" Len might have seen the Extra material.

Thank you and Congrats.

I sincerely hope that everyone is able to spend time with their families today, and give thanks for being alive, having shelter and warmth, food, family and friends. As you give thanks, stop for a moment and ask who it is that you are giving thanks to. Is it the bank for making a mortgage loan to you? Columbia Gas for exploring for gas deposits and building the network of pipelines and pumping stations to get the gas to your home? Is it the Tyson or Cargill farmer who raised the turkey that is now on your table? Fetzer for making inexpensive Cab blanc and white zin to go with the turkey?

Who do you give thanks to? Just think about it - no reply necessary.

Happy Thanksgiving.

Perhaps today you can extend your agreement to be civil to all on this group. No small type/font or disclaimers. Best of Luck and Happy Thanksgiving.

Just the opposite.

Len claimed he saw the 1957 Extra test element (not the material - the actual test). Bash didn't do his thing until the 1970s, more than a decade later.

BINGO!!!

There's also "innocent until proven guilty".

> The other issue that would be in play is > the legality of the law itself on constitutional grounds.

Possibly, but I find it hard to believe that the FCC would have lost on those grounds. Doing so would set a precedent that no license exam contents could be kept out of the public view.

Still, FCC may have thought it better not to take that chance.

It's also common sense. FCC made up study guides consisting of essay questions that indicated the general areas of knowledge that would be on the test. Those guides were published - ARRL reproduced them in their License Manuals (they specifically mention that fact in the Manual). Why would FCC go through the trouble to make up those guides if it were OK for non-FCC people to see the actual exam?

Still, unless there existed specific regulations about divulging and publishing the exam contents, FCC's case agains Bash might have been very weak.

Nor I, but it would make more work for FCC. Right now anyone can go from any license class or no license at all to Extra in one exam session. An experience requirement would mean that many hams would need at least two exam sessions and two FCC paperwork cycles to get to Extra.
More admin work = not something FCC would like.

I still think he broke the law. But that's just my opinion as a nonlawyer. It must be remembered that he was never charged with anything, and that "innocent until proven guilty" is a cornerstone of our judicial process.

So is the "show me the money" analogy. Here's why:

The alleged "theft" was of intellectual property, not a thing like money. Try this analogy:

Last Friday I saw the new Harry Potter movie at the local theater.
(Excellent, btw). Suppose I had videotaped it while it was being shown - wouldn't that be theft? After all, the theater still has the film!

It says right on the movie tickets that you're not to copy what's shown.

I would say "yes", if it's clearly explained as a condition of license
grant. If not, the situation is legally murky in this nonlawyer's opinion.

I disagree! It's important to understand the history and what really happened.

> You can't go back and that's > the bottom line.

Actually we could "go back" to FCC exams - if FCC could somehow be convinced that they were necessary. Good luck doing that one!

One more thought:

9) The FCC may have been aware of Bash's activities, and decided that they did not really harm the ARS, even if they were technically illegal. His activities may have convinced them to make the pools public, which incidentally put him out of business because then anyone could publish them.

Another non-event. I didn't hear of Bash books until long after I had
the Extra. Nor any "equivalent".

Not really. Sure, I didn't have a fulltime job nor dependents to support. But I did have other responsibilities.

OTOH, I had the distinct disadvantage of not having the mobility, money,
freedom of action or education that most adults have.

I wasn't one of those - I had already passed the Extra before entering 11th grade.

Was there an MOS of "Morse Operator"? Or were they called "Radioman" or "Radio Operator"?

Besides, that conflicts with what Len keeps telling us. He constantly denies that Morse Code played any important role in US military communication after the 1930s.

Wild speculation that is not backed up by the facts of what really happened.

And recall that Len wrote:

"Why? Because the older-timers influencing the NAAR lobbyists thought they were hot snit for amateur radio because so many had been professional telegraphers."

and

"It was a way of keeping the old pro status past retirement.
Since they were already skilled in telegraphy, they got a free
set of perquisites in a HOBBY activity."

The Extra was created in 1951, not 1968. It was meant as a replacement for the Advanced/Class A.

Incorrect.

Len claimed he saw the 1957 Extra written test. Not a Bash book or other study guide but the actual test. While not absolutely impossible, it is highly improbable because non-FCC folks were not shown the test unless they were taking it.

Bash did not do his thing until more than a decade after 1957.

Bad idea. No one has been able to show that the licensing of young hams has ever caused problems in the amateur radio service. Len cannot name
even one case where a ham licensee's youth was a factor in a rules violation or other problem.

Any idea what percent of people actually pass both

I suspect the number is relatively small.

That's a matter of copyright violation. The federal government is expressly prohibited from claiming copyright protection for materials it generates.

But we'll never know what actually happened because there is NO record of the decision process and internal analysis
the FCC might have done to determine it would not pursue any legal action against Bash. Phil Kane has his own opinions, but he's not the "higher ups" that made the final decision.

Probably a considerable number. The number of Generals is pretty stable while the number of Extras just keeps growing.

Note too that for one VE fee you get one chance at every element you haven't already passed. If someone goes to a VE session for General, there's no harm or cost (except time) if they try the Extra while they're at it. I've known more than a few hams who went to a VE session intending on the General and who came home with an Extra.

Not a new thing, either. Way back in 1968, when I went to the FCC office at 2nd & Chestnut to take the General, the examiner suggested that I try the Advanced while I was there. No additional cost and since I had the General in the bag, it would actually save him some work in the future. A 14-year-old with any sense at all did not say "no" to The Man, so I tried the Advanced written, and passed.
>
> I suspect the number is relatively small.

Check the AH0A site under "new licenses". While most hams start out as Techs,
every month a small but not negligible number go straight to General or Extra.

Regardless of the number, I doubt FCC would bring back the experience requirement after 30 years without one. Particularly since they'd have to enforce it.

You bet. They started out when some of the guys noticed brief point-source bright flashes on the lunar surface. Used 80m to time whether the flashes were synchronized across large observation distances. If they were not, then the flashes were likely meteors in the earth's atmosphere; if they were synchronized, then the probablility that they were associated with an event on the lunar surface was pretty high.

The guys had scopes setup in the backyard and 100-foot headphone/microphone cables going back to the radio so they could observe and talk on the radio simultaneously.

They did reach a conclusion about the flashes....

If you look carefully at his photo, you can see his Tonka Toys on a shelf to the right. You can also see the basement window near the top of the wall.

Sitting in a basement and playing with Tonka Toys seems like something that an almost-40 man should have outgrown by now.

Soon now, Todd will upgrade to blow-up dolls. He's still searching for a male blowup that looks like his hero, Woger. He needs to find one that is Vaseline resistant and that can take a licking and keep on ticking.

The doll has to be silent, though. No "moaner" for him. He wouldn't want his parents to hear him humping away and run the risk of waking them.

Amazing. With google and the entire internet at your disposal, you -still- don't know how the Marine Corps operates -- which really isn't so amazing since you were never in the Corps. The amazing thing is your determination to avoid the obvious conclusion that you are wrong.
So I guess I'll have to dumb -this- down as well.....

When the 24th MAU was formed (when I deployed with it) the Third Batallion of the 8th Marine Regiment was temporarily detached from the regiment (with me so far?) and attached to the 24th MAU as 'BLT 3/8', a designation which distinguishes it as a deployed unit instead of a unit standing in garrison. There were other units that were -also-temporarily attached to the 24th MAU at the same time, including units from the 2nd MAW. It's the assembly of those -diverse- units that comprised the MAU.

BTW, here's the ship on which I was depoloyed (the largest of the three ships in the group that carried the 24th MAU; the other two were the Ponce and the Saginaw):

http://www.nassau.navy.mil

Make sure to click on "History" and look at the bottom pic. See all the aircraft? If you can't, here's a better pic:

http://www.icehouse.net/wirenut/nassau01.jpg

See the CH-46 in the air? The CH-53's on the flight deck with the Harriers? If you look close you can see the Phalynx (nicknamed "R2D2" for obvious reasons) on the island above and centered between the two large radar domes (domes are near the base of the island). The R2D2 is an automatically controlled, six-barrel, 20mm gattling gun that rips out 3600 rounds/minute and has it's own radar system. Sounds real cool from the chow hall. Anyway, back to the subject.......

Do you see the space between the flight deck and the raised door to the well deck? That's the hangar deck, which runs almost the entire length of the ship. I walked through there just about every day since our tech shop was a cubby-hole located on the port side of the hangar deck and two decks down (one deck below the SNCO food locker, and right next to a 12" ballast pipe which makes a heck of a racket). That's also where the Comm Platoon stored the VINSON gear, so the shop was manned 24/7 by the techs (all seven of us including your's truly), as we were the only Marines on the ship with the security clearance to do so.

And just for shits and grins, here's a pic of the ship anchored in a fjord when we were in Norway in early '83:

http://www.icehouse.net/wirenut/nassau12.jpg

See the CH-46's and CH-53's? Okay. So don't tell -me- that my unit didn't have any avionics personnel. The 24th MAU most certainly -DID- have avionics techs, and that was my unit while I was on float (not on "cruise"). We had quite a bit of contact with those techs due to the close proximity of our tech shop with the hangar deck -- we learned quite a bit about avionics, including those helmet-targeted 20mm guns on the Cobras. And they learned quite a bit about our fields (radio, teletype, wire-line systems, etc).

Now..... got any more ignorant remarks on the subject?

If that was true then you would be familiar with the punishments that are authorized from an Article 15 hearing, and firewatch -isn't- one of them. Yet that's exactly what you previously claimed. You missed the target again, Dud.

Wrong. They are commonly called "pro" (proficiency) and "con" (conduct) marks. And they are not definitive tests for promotion, just things to be considered. I only knew one Marine who ever called them "cutting scores", but that was probably because he did 3 years in the Army before joining the Marines.

Yep. Made LCpl twice, left as a PFC, and one month shy of being eligible for LCpl for a third time, which I probably would have made if I had extended for that West-Pac float (not "cruise") when they asked. And it would have upped my conduct mark by at least the tenth of a point needed to get my Honorable without the hassle. 20/20 hindsight.....

Well Dud, you're a little too late to have your personal opinion recorded in my SRB. And BTW, it would have been recorded on page 11, which is right next to page 12 where crimes and punishments are recorded. But of course you knew that, sitting in on all those Office Hours, right? LOL!!!

Even if you -had- been in the Marines I couldn't care less -how- often you were promoted. But if you had made Sergeant in 5 years but only promoted twice in the following 13 years then -you- must have been doing something -wrong-..... or else doing nothing at all!!!

> If you HAD "...been doing -something- right!!!..." You would have >had all one way promotions...not ups-and-downs!

That's so illogical it's scary. "Doing something right" is not the same as "never doing something wrong", which I never claimed. On the contrary, I have openly admitted making mistakes. Just because a person does something wrong doesn't mean that -everything- he does is wrong. If that were the case I never would have been promoted after my first court-martial. But I was, so you are wrong.

".....a PFC with 3 1/2 years of service...", taken directly from my DD-214 box 11. But that's not where your ignorance ended, Dud. Notice where you suggested that "somewhere on that form it said 'LESS THAN HONORABLE'", totally unaware that the newer (post '79) DD-214 doesn't state character of service, even though you claim to have six of them and been discharged in 1992.

You don't have a single DD-214 to your credit.

Time served in the delayed entry program counts as inactive reserve only for retirement benefits, and then only if you signed up before 1985. I didn't retire. You only served 17 years 9 months, so you didn't retire either. You didn't get credit for time on delayed entry.

Well, Frankie, I didn't need to go any farther than this to get yet another lie out of you, so I know where the rest of the post is going from there. Just like Lennie, you throw in enough to sound convincing, yet the rest is fodder. A lot of cut-and-paste to fill in holes from your own lack of knowledge.

> The amazing thing is > your determination to avoid the obvious conclusion that you are wrong.
> So I guess I'll have to dumb -this- down as well.....

What's "dumbed down", Frankie, is your credibility and honesty, supplemented by your repeated re-pasting of the same stuff over and over.

I am sure the only people impressed are your other cohorts in the Feeble Five, and they've all been proven, at one time or another, to be chronic liars.

So...you're in familiar company.

Here's some simple facts.

(1) I was in the United States Marine Corps.

(2) I, unlike you, served honorably. I was promoted ONCE to each rank Private First Class through Gunnery Sergeant.

(3) I, unlike you, served without so much as an Office Hours for a bad haircut or an hour late to duty. I did so while still managing to pursue an off-duty education and favorite pursuits.

(4) You will never be able to say "I was a good Marine". I can. No, they'll never praise my name at Eighth and I, nor will my name adorn an obstacle at either of the MCRD's. but I did my job faithfully.

You didn't, and no amount of ego-salving in this forum will ever remove the scorn and humiliation you brought on yourself by your cowardice in uniform.

Putz.

Why can't the State decentralize some of it's assets? There has to be National Guard, County Airports, State Colleges, etc that can be used to decentralize. The State gov't already owns all that real estate.

And another thing, what about mobility? Why did I see all of those submerged yellow school busses in air photos? That's rolling stock.
There's no excuse for not driving those busses out. And there's no excuse for not using those busses to evacuate people.

That's my question, how small is that number?
Also, the AH0A site doesn't truly indicate if someone went immediately from Tech to Extra at the same VE session so the ability to determine how many did so via AH0A stats isn't accurate.

> Regardless of the number,
> I doubt FCC would bring back the experience

What's to enforce? All it comes down to is license issuing.

Seems all the FCC need do is not allow the upgrade unless the applicant has 'N' years of elapsed time since getting their General. The FCC database system could automatically withhold issuing the Extra unless the time interval is elapsed.
It could even be automatic so the person might pass their Extra at some point and the FCC system having been notified of the person passing Extra would then be updated and at the elapsed time interval, the FCC could then automatically issue the Extra upgrade. Just some basic software application reprograming as I see it.

That would not work, because of the rampant corruption in

Congratulations. You didn't need to go more than ONE senetence into the post before uttering yet another lie, Frankie.

Do your neighbors know you act this way? Your wife and kids?

The "dumbing down" part was when you enlisted and thought the Corps was going to change to fit you...Not the other way around.

YOUR unit didn't. There were truck units in every Marine Aircraft
Wing to which I was assigned, but that didn't make me a truck driver.

Only the one's you continue to utter Frankie.

Focus, Frankie. Even if you were sleeping with a doctor, you still wouldn't be one.

Not true, Frankie. Starting off with VMFA-333 (as a TME student) and ending up with NAMTD-1032 as an Instructor. Three HMH's, one Group staff, and I & I duty twice in the middle.

More snippage to yet more FrankieDeceit

Very nice.

And Marines still refer to a deployment as a "cruise".

At least those of us who got to go on ships larger than LHA's.

And yes, they also call a "cruise" a "float".

Nope.

I SAID that most "infractions" were dealt with by NCOIC's and Sergeats Major by way of such "punishments" before they ever came to "official" punishment.

You've tried to suggest that ALL employment was such.

All you've done is make a fool out of yourself in trying to suggest that by having a part-time job I was somehow violating a Marine

Brian, K3VR, traced a particularly offensive, pornographic post about me to Easley, South Carolina. The post consists of fabricated and odious charges.

Easley, South Caroline is the home of one Rich Whiten, ex-WB2OTK. When Brian confronted him, he did not deny it. So, we've unmsked this anonymous poster playing havoc on this thread and others.

Bar door swings open; KB9RQZ walks in wearing his tightest leather pants.
K4YZ: Hi KB9RQZ! How is it hanging!
KB9RQZ: Pretty good, check it out.
(KB9RQZ drops his pants, revealing his pink g-string)
K4YZ: Not bad big guy. I get to see more later, right?
KB9RQZ: You will have to ask KC8LDO, I promised him first crack at
it. Is that a new tattoo on our arm?
K4YZ: Yes, just got it last week.
(K4YZs rolls his sleeve the rest of the way up to reveal a swastika)
KB9RQZ: Why did you get that?
K4YZ: I am tired of people thinking I am a wimp, call it intimidation.
KB9RQZ: Did you stop buy and pick up the Videos for the get together tonight?
K4YZ: I picked up N8WWMs favorite, deep anal slam.
KB9RQZ: Speaking of N8WWM, he was supposed to be here.
K4YZ: He called me earlier, he had to go to some kind of parole hearing.
KB9RQZ: I told him not to involved with women, we could treat him better than any women ever thought of doing.
K4YZ: Hey look, KC8LOD just walked in.
KB9RQZ: I just love it when he wears his bare midriff shirt.
KC8LDO: Hi guys, whats up?
K4YZ: Waiting for you and N8WWM.
KC8LDO: He was just driving in the parking lot when I came in.
N8WWM: Hi Guys, I finally made it.
KB9RQZ: How did your hearing go?
N8WWM: Bad, they actually expect you take care of your kids and support them.
KC8LDO: See, we told you about women.
N8WWM: I know, I know. I'm done with them.
KB9RQZ: What's in the bag?
N8WWM: I was hungry, stopped of at Coney express and picked up a "dog" (N8WWM opens the bag and pulls out a foot long hot dog, which falls on the floor and rolls under the table) KB9RQZ: It's mine, I saw it first (KB9RQZ and KC8LDO start wrestling for it, KC8LDO trying to bite it, KB9RQZ trying to stick it up his butt) KC8LDO: NO, It's mine.

N8WWM: Here, cut it in half, then you will both be happy.
K4YZ: I can't believe you two, it's all covered with dirt.
KB9RQZ: Reminds me of the time N8WWM and I went to the beach.
N8WWM: Yeah, I remember that time, took me a week to heal up.
KC8LDO: N8WWM, what's the deal with that picture that Steve took of you? You looked terrible, did you just roll out of bed?
N8WWM: No, I was in the middle of something.
KB9RQZ: Middle of what?
N8WWM: Jamming a repeater. Guess that will teach them to make fun of me because of my no-code status.
K4YZ: Don't you ever learn? You have already been spanked for that.
N8WWM: Speaking of spanking, are we ready to leave yet? KB9RQZ's G-string is really turning me on.
KC8LDO: Think his is cute, check this out.
(Drops pants to reveal an "elephant trunk" G-string.
N8WWM: My God! Lets go, elephants do like nuts don't they?

Did you work for FCC in 1951, Len? Did you see FCC chuckling at handwritten letters?

It's always been that way, Len.

Fun fact:

Back about 1964 - a bit more than a dozen years after 1951, and more than 25 years before "the internet went public", the proposed changes that would come to be known as "incentive licensing" caused FCC to receive over 6000 comments. Back then the US amateur population was less than half what it is today, and practically all of them went by US mail.

Did the FCC "chuckle" over them?

From ARNewsline #1476:

THAT FINAL ITEM: THEY CALL IT BGPL

And finally this week, another player has entered the broadband access arena. A a San Diego, California company called Nethercomm is developing a way to use ultra wideband wireless signals to transmit data at broadband speeds through natural-gas pipes. Jim Linton, VK3PC, has the rather strange details:

The catch-cry of late comic actor Jimmy Durante was to say, "Everybody's trying to get into the act!" But today that's exactly how to describe the latest pipe-dream broadband delivery idea.

A United States company is proposing to use ultra wideband wireless signals to transmit data at broadband speeds. But here's the interesting part, the transmission medium will be the pipes that carry natural gas. The company claims its yet to be tested technology could offer 100 megabits per second to every home - more than enough to provide voice, video and high-speed Internet access.

Just like the promises made by BPL promoters that they can revolutionize the power industry, the same type of hype is likely to be associated with broadband over gas pipeline or BGPL.

I'm Jim Linton VK3PC for the Amateur Radio Newsline.

It all but boggles ones mind as to who will be next to try and get into the broadband access industry. Perhaps your local water company or sewerage authority? Only time will tell. More is on-line at http://www.nethercomm.com/

They must have a lot of folks fooled, a google search on Nethercomm gets Wrong, and that's why you snipped the relevant statement: "The 24th MAU most certainly -DID- have avionics techs, and that was my unit while I was on float (not on 'cruise')."

Where, in any of my posts, did I claim to be an avionics tech?

I suppose that's vague enough to be interpreted in whatever way that supports your current opinion, so I'll plead 'no contest' to that one.
But it still doesn't explain why, after allegedly attending "several"
NJP hearings, you didn't know which SRB page is used to record those punishments.

By your own admission, off-duty employment was regulated by your Pardon me..... Arkansas. Tennessee, Arkansas, Missouri..... it's all their cousins and there aren't any Marine Corps bases within a days

Oh, so you are presuming that my ambition was to make a career out of the Marines? That's pretty narrow-minded of you, Dud. A lot of people join the military not intending to make it their career, but just to satisfy a patriotic 'call to duty' (for lack of a better phrase). Almost every man on both sides of my family have been military all the way back to my Grandfather and his brother (first gen in USA):

http://freepages.military.rootsweb.com/~cacunithistories/31stbrigade.htm

I had a great-uncle that did some island-hopping as a Marine in WWII (and his travel ticket includes Iwo Jima), two uncles that did their stint in the Air Force (both in radio during the Korea years when Morse was required), another uncle in the Marines for 4 years, another uncle in the army for 12 years, my cousin did 6 years in the Coast Guard, and my Dad (a Viet-Nam vet) got a medical discharge from the Navy after 18-1/2 years (which is how I know that you couldn't have upgraded your medical discharge -- been there, done that).

But is my ego bruised? Hardly. Just like my family and many other people, I joined the Marines out of a sense of duty to my country. Like I said before, I wasn't the 'model Marine'; but if my service was half as bad as -you- are trying to make it sound then they would have kicked me out long before my cruise was up. When I had fulfilled my duty and had the option to re-enlist, I stayed true to my original plans by leaving the Marines, going to college, and moving on with my life.

Now you may have planned to be a lifer from the very start, which is all fine and dandy. If you -had- become a Marine then that might have been a good career for you. If you hate me because I didn't take the opportunity that you never had to become a career Marine, fine, I can deal with that. But for you to justify impersonating a Marine because it was your childhood dream does nothing but belittle the very thing you dreamed of being -- a Marine. Grow up, Dud.

I suppose all one has to do is turn on the gas range and log on.

I would think many people would read this then go straight to a websearch to see if its true. Then if there's a website out there they believe it. One thing comes to mind, electronic signals down a gas pipe.. KERBOOM.....or doesn't it work like that ;o)

2542. FAQ - Is anyone interested in _REAL_ Ham Radio any more?

What is Ham Radio?

Ham Radio is a technical pursuit for those who are interested in the science of radio wave propagation and who are also interested in the way that their radios function. It has a long-standing tradition of providing a source of engineers who are born naturals.

Ham Radio awakens in its aficionados a whole-life fascination with all things technical and gives an all-abiding curiosity to improve one's scientific knowledge. It's a great swimming pool, please dive in!

This excitement causes a wish to share the experience with ones fellow man, and shows itself in the gentlemanly traditions of Ham Radio.

Radio Hams are in a unique privileged position in that they can construct and operate their own equipment! No-one else has this privilege. Users, such as broadcasters, the po lice and armed farces, CBers and mobile phone users have to purchase ready-made gear. Manufacturers are not licensed to operate their gear. Radio Hams are qualified to design, build and then operate their own pieces of equipment. They do this with gusto, and also repair and modify their own equipment. This is a privilege well worth the effort to gain, and one to be jealously guarded.

The excitement that drives a Radio Ham starts with relatively simple technologies at first, perhaps making his own Wimshurst machine and primary cells. Small pieces of test equipment follow, possibly multimeters and signal generators. Then comes receivers and transmitters. It is with the latter that communication with like-minded technically motivated people takes off. The scope for technical development grows with the years and now encompasses DSP and DDS. There is also a great deal of excitement in the areas of computer programming to be learnt and applied.

The technical excitement motivates Radio Hams to compete with each other to determine who has designed and manufactured the best-quality station. This competitiveness is found in DXing, competitions and fox-hunts.

-----OOOOO----

However, beware! A Ham Radio licence is such a desirable thing to have that there are large numbers of people who wish to be thought of as Radio Hams when, in fact, they are nothing of the kind! Usually such people are a variation of the CB Radio hobbyist; they buy their radios off the shelf and send them back to be repaired; they are not interested in technical discussion and sneer at those who are; they have no idea how their radios work inside and have no wish to find out;
they are free with rather silly personal insults;
they have not satisfied any technical qualification and their licences prevent the use of self-designed-and-built equipment.

These CB types engage in the competitive activities with their Cheque-Book-purchased off-the-shelf radios
in a forlorn effort to prove that they are Radio Hams.

No _REAL_ Radio Hams are deceived by such people!

-----ooooo-----

One infallible way to disambiguate the CB Radio Hobbyist from the _REAL_ Radio Ham is to solicit their view of the difference between CB Radio and Ham Radio. A Radio Ham will perceive Ham Radio to be a technical pursuit and will perceive CB Radio to be a social communications facility no different in essence to a land-line telephone or a GSM mobile in the hands of a 6-year-old. Thus a Radio Ham could also hold a CB licence safe in the knowledge that such a licence says no more about him than having a land-line telephone, whilst continuing to regard Ham Radio as a separate technical pursuit.

A CB Radio hobbyist, on the other hand, sees no difference between a Ham Radio licence and a CB Radio licence. To him, they are sisters-under-the-skin. Wrongly, the CB Radio Hobbyist then tries to classify himself as the equal of the Radio Ham when, in fact, he is nothing of the kind. A sure sign of a CB Radio hobbyist is if he holds, or has ever held, a licence issued under the gangrenous degeneration that is the M3/CB Fools' Licence scheme.

-----ooooo-----

One group of people who claim to be of the standard of Radio Hams but who are in reality nothing more than an apology for the failure of a CBer are those class B licensees who falsely proclaimed that they were against the use of a Morse Test to control access to the HF bands, until, that is, a test was introduced at their intellectual level, the intellectual level of 6-year-olds.

6 year-olds simply lack the mathematical tool kit to enable them to handle even the simplest algebraic manipulation for Ohm's Law and thus, the disgraceful Class Ber's in the aforementioned category are not Radio Hams by any stretch of the imagination!

Remember - A sure sign of a CB Radio hobbyist is if he holds,
or has ever held, a licence issued under the gangrenous degeneration that is the M3/CB Fools' Licence scheme!

Not really, When you said "This is what we get when we allow CBers into ham radio." perhaps one might think that was a bit condescending as well. I was a CBer in a previous life, and now almost 25 years later I've had both an FCC commercial class license as well as Amateur Extra here in the states, and have been an ARRL Division official in a past life. So I don't think CBers or no-coders (in and of themselves) have anything to do with the "quality" of individual hams.

How about everyone treating each other with respect, and ignoring the clowns that don't?

Obviously, you don't listen very closely to Limbaugh. He has affirmed many times over the years in his books, newsletter, web site, on his old TV show, and on his radio show that he is first and foremost an entertainer and that his job is to attract and hold an audience, something he is very good at, wouldn't you agree? While you are at it, how about giving us an update on how successful Air America is?

wackos have to offer is name calling. Here, I will even

From ARNewsline #1476:

ENFORCEMENT: WRL / GALAXY ELECTRONICS FOUNDER MEYERSON ASKS FCC NOT TO RENEW K1MAN'S LICENSE

Another well known ham has written to the FCC asking the agency not to renew the license of American Amateur Radio Association founder Glen Baxter, K1MAN. In a letter to FCC rules enforcer Riley Hollingsworth that's been posted in cyberspace, Leo I. Meyerson, W0GFQ, charges that Baxter has been distributing unsolicited commercial e-mail that uses his name to promote business interests. He goes on to say that his now public letter is intended to let the FCC and the public know that Baxter has no authorization to use his name, photo nor that of Meyerson's wife. Nor does he support any of Baxter's activities, business or otherwise.

For those of you new to the hobby, Leo Meyerson, W0GFQ, is a walking legend. He was the founder of World Radio Laboratories and Galaxy Electronics. His simple but effective Globe Chief and Globe Scout transmitters were the first station for many new hams in the 1940's, 50's and 60's. He was also among the first to bring high frequency transceivers to ham radio through his Galaxy product line.

Meyerson's letter goes on to say that he is aware that the FCC has issued a $21,000 Notice of Apparent Liability against Baxter's Amateur Radio station. He ends by asking the Commisson to not renew Baxter's license which has been set aside by the FCC.

Meyerson's letter to the FCC concerning Baxter's pending license renewal is the second such note this year. As previously reported, retired CBS Newsman Walter Cronkite, KB2GSD, wrote the FCC last June after Baxter allegedl;y refused to stop using 1996 era promotional material containing Cronkite's voice. # 2576. Massachusetts Politician "Disses" Amateur Radio In Televised Town Meeting... Oops!

Massachusetts Governor Mitt Romney dismissed the role of Amateur Radio operators in emergency communications during a televised "town meeting" program on WCVB's "When Disaster Strikes: Segment Two." The program featured public safety and volunteer organization officials from across Massachusetts among its audience.

Host and moderator Natalie Jacobson asked an increasingly-agitated Governor Romney questions about communications interoperability, and communication without commercial power. Romney was next asked by Jacobson, "...so does it come down to ham radio?..."

The Governor replied in a disgusted tone, "No, we don't need to deal with ham radio operators..."

Embarrassed public safety officials later tried to put in a good word for Amateur Radio. National Weather Service Warning Coordination Meteorologist Glenn Field was prepared to state the importance of Amateur Radio, when Salvation Army Colonel Fred Van Brunt was called upon. Van Brunt remarked about his organization's quest to improve its communications capabilities and how Amateur Radio has aided his organization. "The ham radio situation helps a great deal," he stated.

"I have already written and submitted a letter to the Governor's Office," wrote Eastern MA Section Emergency Coordinator Rob Macedo, KD1CY. "I have also written an email to Natalie Jacobson."

ARRL Section Manager Mike Neilsen, W1MPN, sent a section-wide email to all Eastern MA ARRL members describing the incident along with actions he and his staff were taking to mitigate the situation.

"[Romney's] attitude about us sets an unfortunate tone within the state's executive branch," wrote Neilsen. "As a former military officer, I see this as a failure in leadership. My immediate concern is our working relationship within the [Massachusetts Emergency Management Team] environment." Neilsen intended to address the Governor's comments as "an urgent matter" at a meeting on November 17 with Don Carlton from the Emergency Management Agency.

"I was very disturbed about what the Governor stated on the program," wrote Ron Wood, W1PLW, the section's Public Information Coordinator. "It does show that more work is needed by all hams in the section. It's a great idea to write letters explaining the good we do." Wood is attempting to schedule a meeting with the Governor's office so that EMA ARRL staffers might discuss the matter further.

Tom Kinahan, N1CPE wrote that Governor Romney's comment has made "a PR problem" for Kinahan in his role as MA State RACES Officer.

"I've got a roster of over 150 Amateur Radio operators that support local communities, and those of us that directly support the state government. There are at least double that in terms of people that are actually out there that I don't have formal paperwork on that support Amateur Radio emergency communications in some organized manner... The Governor has said that he 'certainly doesn't need to rely on ham radio' -- where does that leave the RACES program now?"

Electric lines and gas pipes will carry Internet to Illinois town
By Jon Van
Tribune staff reporter

November 26, 2005

PRINCETON, Ill. -- Starting in December this town of 7,500 will begin offering high-speed Internet service over the electrical lines that power the city.

It is among a handful of communities nationwide to plunge into a new technology called broadband over power lines, or BPL, that competes with Internet connections provided by telephone and cable TV operators. Combined with wireless technologies, broadband service delivered over power lines--and perhaps one day even through natural gas pipelines--raises the likelihood that going online anywhere at any time for very low cost will soon be a reality.

The Princeton service, which began testing this spring, is being watched by small communities across Illinois. One member of the Illinois Commerce Commission hopes other towns will experiment with BPL to spread Internet connectivity and drive down costs.

About 15 customers are served by Princeton's BPL test deployment, which demonstrates the service is robust and works well, said Jason Bird, superintendent of Princeton's municipal electric utility.

"From the utility's standpoint, this hasn't been difficult," he said. "The equipment is similar to what we work with every day."

Customers seem to like the service, especially the in-house portability BPL offers. A computer can move from one room to another and go online simply by plugging its modem into any electrical outlet in the house.

"I'm much more active on the Interent now because the speed is much better than with dial-up," said Leslie Lund, who began using BPL in March. "I don't get interference, even when my husband uses his power tools."

The electric line connections get their Internet signals from a 12-mile loop of fiber that Princeton installed last year as a means of attracting industrial development. After one factory left town in 2003 and the manager of another complained about the town's lack of advanced communications infrastructure, the city decided it needed fiber, said Mayor Keith Cain.

"We already had our own electric utility, so that gave us a real advantage," he said. Since the city installed fiber and started testing BPL the local cable and phone operators upgraded their systems and cut service rates, he said.

One downside to Princeton's BPL experience has been an inability to get enough equipment to begin the commercial rollout sooner, Cain said. The town's BPL vendor ran into financial difficulty and stopped producing equipment while it went into reorganization.

Under new ownership, the vendor now says it can ship the products needed for the rollout, said Steve Brust, vice president of Connecting Point Community Centers, the Internet service provider that manages Princeton's broadband service.

"The equipment works fine, but it's proprietary," Brust said. "There are a lot of companies in BPL right now, but there are no standards and no one company dominates the market."

Lack of standards is common with any new technology, said Raymond Blair, vice president for BPL initiatives for IBM Corp. Broadband technologies like Wi-Fi that are based on standards enjoy popularity because the equipment is interoperable and less expensive than proprietary systems.

At least three industry-based committees are working toward BPL standardization, Blair said. The emerging industry should benefit from their work within a year or two, he said.

"The best case for BPL right now lies in creating a smart electrical grid," Blair said. Utilities can spot trouble, read meters, improve efficiencies and generally boost reliability once they install fiber to monitor their grids, he said.

Once BPL standards are in place, equipment costs will drop, making a stronger economic case for offering high-speed Internet to residences, Blair said.

Robert Lieberman, a member of the Illinois Commerce Commission, said the state has $5 million it will award to projects intended to extend Internet connectivity.

There will be another $5 million available next year, and he hopes that some BPL projects will receive a portion of that Digital Divide infrastructure funding.

Also, Lieberman said, the ICC and state lawmakers need to provide incentives to electric utilities to install smart grid equipment that makes BPL to residential customers possible. Texas lawmakers recently adopted such incentives, and legislators in New York are considering doing so, he said.

Power lines aren't the Internet's only new avenue into homes. There's also interest in using natural gas pipelines.

Broadband in gas, or BiG, has been proven to work in concept, although field trials haven't yet been launched, said George West, a senior analyst with West Technology Research Solutions, a market research firm based in Mountain View, Calif.

BiG would rely upon ultra-wideband radio waves traveling through gas pipes to bring Internet to customers. The Federal Communications Commission approved ultra-wideband applications a few years ago but requires they operate at very low power to avoid interference with wireless phones and other appliances.

Pumping ultra-wideband signals along gas lines buried underground would shield them from interference, enabling them to operate at higher power, West said. "BiG has the potential to serve 18 million homes by 2010."

The ICC's Lieberman said he is intrigued by BiG.

"I'd love to see a project with People's Gas or Nicor to test this," he said. "My theory is the more pipes you have to bring the Internet to customers, the better for everyone."

It's impossible to accurately determine upgrades from AH0A's numbers. An upgrade is classed as a modification, same as an address or name change.

But if you look at the number of new licenses, it's clear that at least some new hams bypass Tech and go straight for General or Extra. AH0A's numbers only count as "new" licenses where the licensee was not in the database at all during the previous month.

Of course some "new" licenses are actually "retread" hams, who let their licenses lapse for whatever reason and now are back.

Actually the enforcement would fall upon the VEs anyway. They'd be required to only give the Extra test to those who could show a General or Advanced license that had been issued at least X amount of time previously. Form 605 could be changed so that you'd have to indicate the effective date of the General, etc.

So it really wouldn't be an FCC enforcement thing at all.

OTOH, it would increase FCC admin work slightly because they'd have more upgrades to process.

The big hurdle would be selling FCC on the idea that an experience requirement is needed, after 30 years without one. That selling job would rival convincing them that a 5 wpm code test is still needed.......;-)

Frank, I'm still of the opinion that Dudly was never IN the Corps at all. Maybe, just maybe he was in the reserves for a while as you say he might have been.

His technique on this newsgroup is simply to bluff his way through, calling his challengers "wrong" and insulting their person in order to misdirect the thread content. :-)

Interesting. The only ship I was on was the MSTS General M. M.
Patrick...one of the small troopships built at the close of the Second World War. 33 days total, over to Japan in '53, back to the States in '56. The 'Patrick' was dismantled some time after, only the ship's bell surviving as part of a historical monument in Arizona (never did figure that one out). Took some digging to find out the facts on that ship and obtain a souvenir picture of the whole ship from the air (difficult thing to do when on-board). :-)

<snip>

>Now..... got any more ignorant remarks on the subject?

PLEASE! Don't ask! :-)

Dud has already made iggorant remarks on civilian avionics that were standardized for the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) since '55. He can't even describe the general principles of either TACAN (for military) or VOR (for civilians) of very common aircraft radionavigation systems.

Dud couldn't describe anything but PR-sheet material for the set-top box maker he said he worked for (for less than a half year) as a purchasing agent (who "knew" what electronics engineering was). :-)

Frank, his "Col Vinson" reply is a classic faux pas worthy of a trophy of some sort! :-)

Dud was once more bluffing his way through, probably operating on hearsay from some boatanchor hams who collect old military radios and blabber about them as if they actually worked the stuff in the military. They seem to use one another as "references" and tend to get their "facts" a tad inaccurate at times. The ones which are the most accurate are exemplified by Jerry Proc's crypto web pages.

Despite starting off in REAL radio some 52 years ago and having to get into engineering of later models of military radios, I've never had to bother with all the "NSA boxes." By the 1990s, the COMSEC features were built into military radios. The SINCGARS family (Dud despises those for some reason, probably because he never played with one since they became operational in '89) combined the crypto features into their frequency-hopping mode control, thus causing the SINCGARS net setting control entry to be called a "hop set" (familiar name used by all the branches).
Tsk, poor Dud would not accept the fact that Fort Gordon's Signal School used a USMC-generated computer learning course on SINCGARS and the Signal School praised the USMC version (they also used a computer course generated by a civilian company). As of the end of 2003 there were a QUARTER MILLION produced and operational SINCGARS R/Ts in the U.S. military, mostly by ITT Fort Wayne, IN

(the old Magnavox factory).

It was fine by me that NSA handled the crypto and, before the NSA was organized, the U.S. military Army-Navy "rotor machines" system (never known to be compromised until CWO Walker came along and the USS Pueblo captured) before that. "Rotor machines" (teletypewriters with mods) bore the brunt of crypto comms from just before WW2 until after the Greek name types reached an end. I never got to see the old classic field unit, the M-209 Code Converter, in its metal flesh was seen at a traveling spy exhibit was at the Reagan Presidential Library in 2002.

>http://www.jproc.ca/crypto/ky57.html
>http://hereford.ampr.org/millist/m25.html
>http://www.pacificsites.com/~brooke/KY38.shtml
>http://www.jproc.ca/crypto/ky28.html

Interesting places. The NSA has a museum web page (!) but doesn't give many details on equipment. So does the Military Intelligence School at Fort Huachuca, AZ; good bios on the M.I. predecessor "names" there.

Another link worthy of reading on recent crypto history is Major Laura Heath's Master of Military History thesis on the John Walker spy ring and the failure of the USN to plug holes in the hull of its Fleet Broadcasting System crytpo security system. Major Heath is USA, already had a Masters from a university and was getting another at the Fort Leavenworth Command and General Staff School. Sailor types will get all upset on that thesis but it's an unfortunate fact of history. Heath's 2005 thesis is also found on the www.fas.org site.

Dud is on a seven-year binge of sour whine. :-)

We can be assured that Dud's "replies" against his fantasies are to declare the challengers to be: "LIAR," "coward,"
"PUTZ," "liar," "a disgrace," and/or a "Liar."

Such words are just part of the "mirror syndrome" where Dudly is looking at a reflection himself in the screen and thinking it is the other person. His continuing emphasis on "lying" is probably because he does so much of it himself.

<snip>

Thank you, Frank, most interesting...:-)

For the benefit of the civilians among the readers, "UCMJ" is an acronym for Universal Code of Military Justice, the common set of laws for all United States military branches.
The UCMJ has existed for over half a century.

<snip>

>".....a PFC with 3 1/2 years of service...", taken directly from my >DD-214 box 11. But that's not where your ignorance ended, Dud. Notice >and been discharged in 1992.

>
>You don't have a single DD-214 to your credit.

Again, for benefit of the civilians among the readers, "DD-214" is a Department of Defense form filled out at the end of a continuous period of military service as their RELEASE FROM ACTIVE DUTY.
That form has been common to all military branches for over half a century. Mine, issued in 1956 at Fort Sheridan, IL, has a box in the upper left corner stating CONDITION OF RELEASE. A DD-214 cannot ever be a certificate of discharge from military service;
each military branch issues their own on termination of military service.

A "Condition of Release" can contain a reference to a transfer from one military branch to another, as was common when the USAF was created out of former USA personnel back in the 1940s. There are rare cases after that of transfers from one branch to another

but, for the vast majority of those who served, they got ONE DD-214. "Multiple" DD-214 possession indicates either forgery or the most rare cases of a person going into the service, serving their whole time in one branch, then getting a discharge, going into civilian life, then rejoining again. ONE DD-214 for one of those "cycles" and only one per "cycle." Re-enlistment established PRIOR to ending the contracted term of military service does not result in a DD-214 issued for each "hitch."

The needed REAL proof that is substantive is a copy of the DD-214.
All who served in the U.S. military got one. If a personal copy is no longer available, one can be obtained from NARA in St. Louis.
The NARA website has been discussed in here before. They have a request form on-line or one can download a surface mail copy.
That form MUST contain the requestor's Social Security number.
If the requestor had a military branch service number, that must also be included in that form. NARA will not supply a copy without the information supplied. Family members, next of kin, can request a copy but MUST supply the required information. Anyone else requesting a copy (other than approved agencies) is SOL.

A DD-214 is a single page form, standard letter size, copyable on any xerographic or photographic copier. A copy from NARA costs only a few dollars. Kinko's, Office Depot, Office Max chain stores offer copying-to-digital-file service for a few dollars.

Major Dud figures that, with enough of his bubbles, everyone's sight will be so obstructed that they can't see his lack of a DD-214. Dud has had seven years to actually prove his military service by showing an official document verifying that but has NEVER done so. One single readable copy of a DD-214, about 300K file size, would do the trick.

Seven years and NOTHING. Not one single snapshot of him on active duty during his claimed 18 years of active time. Not one formal portrait of the mighty warrior in full dress uniform. NOTHING.

You see, news readers, we are seeing that K1MAN and supporter consider deceit and libel funny. I say that both are qualities disqualifying individuals from being ham radio operators.

Rich Whiten is already ex-WB2OTK; Glenn Baxter's renewal of K1MAN has been set aside. With one foot on a banana peel and the other in the grave, declaraing deceit legitimate in regulation is Baxter's deathknell.

Why should an applicant be prohibited from taking and passing the test? The time interval should be limiting the actual license issuance...not serve as a roadblock to taking the test at any time.

I don't know about other areas but here in NC, our gaslines are plastic.

Even the larger mains are all plastic pipe.

BPL will loose money bigtime, and the utilities that go online with it will siphon money from other ratepayers to pay for the starup and the shutdown of bpl.

Mark, he may not be lying. None-the-less, he does have some explaining to do. Perhaps he could consult with the "Lamba" Amateur Radio Club (LARC) in order to come up with the answer to your question since he appears to have no clue as to why he continually tries to tie his responses to you to sexuality. Since he has no answer of his own perhaps a Quite LARC member could lend some assistance.

FINALLY!!

THE TRUTH!

The public has known for a long time how useless ham radio is, not to mention the low life types who becomes hams. Think I'll have to write a few letters myself. most of the spectrum 50 mhz and above should be turned over to commerical interests.

GOOD FOR YOU, GOVERNOR!!

We wouldn't want you to be "bothered", Len. I had to be "bothered" with a number of them over the years". You never had to be "bothered" with morse code either. That's two things which have gotten along pretty well without your expertise.

Sigh Do you ever get anything right, Leonard. UCMJ stands for "Uniform Code of Military Justice".

That's twice with "for benefit of the civilians among the readers" stuff. Are you under the impression that you're in the military now? If you're going to attempt clarification for the civilians among the readers, the least you could do is get your ducks in a row.

Typical politico or either party.

Hasn't a clue how the states com systems works, get frustrated by the hard questions, and lashes out when he should has kept quite. Sadly he will in all probability not suffer for his stupidity.

He ought to be ran out of office on a rail.

This attitude is why I no longer participate in ARES, SkyWarn or any other
activity that has ANY government connection.

PICON be damned.

I have spent enough nights looking for tornados, enough weekends trying
to
"interface" with various government agencies to deliver messages during floods,
and enough cold days running MDs and nurses around when the snow/ice shuts
the town down.

FINALLY!!

THE TRUTH!

The public has known for a long time how useless ham radio is, not to mention the low life types who becomes hams. Think I'll have to write a few letters myself. most of the spectrum 50 mhz and above should be turned over to commerical interests.

GOOD FOR YOU, GOVERNOR!!

Think about it: State: Massachusettes; Politician: Mitt Romney.
Doesn't that say it all? This isn't the first time his head (or lard-ass Ted Kennedy's head for that matter) has been impacted up his ass! Why do the people in this state keep electing these bottom feeders?

Having seen some of the handwritten "comments" sent in on the 2,272 filings in WT Docket 98-143 and ALL of the 3,795 filings in WT Docket 05-235, some are a hilarious barrel of laffs! :-)

[ chuckle, chuckle ]

By the way, Docket 98-143 had 303 ADDITIONAL filings after the twice-revised final end date of 15 Jan 05, the latest being made on 5 August 2005! :-)

98-143 had an average of 206 filings per month while 05-235 had 949 per month. The percentage of written letter filings on 98-143 was 10.4 while on 05-235 it was only 2.2 percent.

Riiiiight...you went to the Reading Room at the FCC to "see" them? Was a fairly easy access to documents before 11
September 2001.

Oh, right...the ARRL TOLD YOU! Or you channeled St. Hiram on the subject and you got the number in a vision?

1964 is FORTY ONE YEARS AGO, old-timer. Two generations in time.
CWO Johnny Walker had already gotten his first spy payments from the KGB. The Vietnam War was beginning to hot up again now that the French had given up there. Communist China was busy with their "cultural revolution." The beginning of the solid-state era had begun. Teletype Corporation was busy starting marketing for their 100 WPM teletypewriters. The first of the comm sats had been lofted. The Cold War was still set on "simmer" with no sign the flame had gone out. We got coast-to-coast TV, in color, and some radio amateurs thought manual morse code marked "excellence in radio!" :-)

"Nothing?!?" Mais non!

Eight years prior to 1964 I'd already passed my First Phone test and had been working at four broadcast stations (got the signatures on the back of my First Phone license certificate).
Had already renewed that First Phone once...through the Long Beach, CA, FCC Field Office (which was/is in the San Pedro harbor area). I'd applied for, and gotten two CB licenses (no test, never was a test for them). I'd already worked at a southern California broadcast station on a part-time basis, got that signature on the back of my first renewed First Phone certificate. I was still subscribing for updates to the FCC regulations (loose leaf format) from the U.S. GPO but that would soon change to bound format, reprint every two years

(too many radio services already). I'd already used that First Phone for radio communications while a student pilot (given up due to cost of private flying vs other expenses), avoiding having to get a Restricted 3rd Class Phone (which required some letters of explanation from the Long Beach, CA, FCC Field Office to the instructors at Skyways that operated out of Van Nuys Airport...they didn't believe it). In my job of designing and engineering semiconductor test sets at Birtcher, all I had to do on "FCC matters" was making certain those test sets and their plug-ins didn't exceed incidental RF radiation limits (the very low-duty cycle plug-ins were found to cause RF oscillation at tester pulse edges, solved by using ferrite tubes as chokes on the test socket leads). A renewal of the CBs was coming up soon, those renewals, pro forma as they were, had to go to the FCC...and with notary public seals.

Electro-Optical Systems in Pasadena was busy hiring for their spacecraft work and I shift to there from Monterey Park, CA, in late 1964. Spacecraft fabrication in a clean room didn't involve any "FCC licenses." What RF work was needed took place under government radio regulations, not civil radio. FCC was not involved in government radio then...or now.

[ chuckle, chuckle ]

No, sweetums, I was NOT opining anything pro/con on morse code skill as the primus inter pares of amateur radio operating excellence nor had I any "incentives" for ham radio in 1964. Based on my "first job in radio" I already knew that morse code was a dead end in radio in 1964, 41 years ago. Why bother pursuing a dying technique back then?

[ chuckle, chuckle ]

Somewhere I have a link to a professional design magazine that details the only comm links to work for 3 or 4 weeks after Katrina were the ham's.

The NG, FEMA and Corp of Engineers were reduced to using runners to move messages.

I will dig out the link and post it in the next several days.

I don't normally cut and past entire atricles, but this one is important.
It shows why Ham radio is far from "useless'.

A few months ago, NBC's Tonight Show staged a race between a pair of ham-radio operators with Morse-code keys and a couple of kids with text-messaging cellphones to see who could communicate faster. The hams won hands down, proving, in the minds of some, that old technology could hold its own against new. In recent days, ham radio was put to the test again by Hurricane Katrina. This time, however, lives were at stake.

In the world of design engineers and electronics in general, change is essential. Designers work diligently to make the fruits of their labors obsolete almost before they see daylight. The turnover in technology is sometimes like a flood, with old being washed away by new over and over. Often, the new beats the heck out of the old. But there are times when old isn't necessarily bad; in fact, sometimes old works when new doesn't. And then we're glad that old is still around, or at least we should be.

Wireless technology, while relatively new to many consumers, is of course not new at all. A few (very) old-timers remember the original "wireless" of radio. The revolution wrought by the pioneers of wireless changed the world then, and the technology behind that revolution has been re-invented and re-applied time and again. Its pre-eminent incarnation today is our near-ubiquitous wireless communications infrastructure, which has freed us from the shackles of landlines and made our mobile lifestyles possible. Technology truly is great stuff.

Until, of course, a monster hurricane comes along to render it nearly useless. Here we see a scenario in which a flood literally swept away the new. As Hurricane Katrina's fury hammered the Gulf states on August 29, the communications infrastructure took a devastating hit. Telephone service, including wireless, became at first intermittent and then unusable in many localities. Where there was phone service, 911 switchboards were often unreachable due to the massive volume of calls. The response of local authorities, now termed "confused" by deposed FEMA chief Michael Brown, wasn't helping much. The Gulf Coast was about to descend into darkness, chaos, and, worst of all for many, silence.

But proponents of the old were at the ready. The "old," in this case, is ham radio. In the eyes of the "man on the street," ham radio has a pretty stodgy reputation. Aren't hams still using Morse code? Don't some of them use radios with tubes, for goodness sake? What the "man in the street" probably doesn't know is that it was amateurs who advanced the radio arts early in the 20th century. Down through the decades, amateurs have embraced (and often driven) all of the innovations in wireless technology, up to and including all digital modes and the Internet. But many have stayed in touch with their roots, which is good old-fashioned analog HF operation. And while amateurs have a longstanding tradition as innovators and experimenters, they also have a mandate that comes with their licenses: to be ready, willing, and able to provide emergency communications whenever and wherever they're needed.

As Katrina bore down on the Gulf region, amateur radio operators, under the aegis of the American Radio Relay League's (ARRL's) Amateur Radio Emergency Service (ARES), prepared to swing into action with emergency networks that would run health-and-welfare traffic into and out of the disaster zone. As early as the Monday following the storm, hams throughout the hurricane zone were putting emergency stations on the air. In one instance, hams were instrumental in the rescue of 15 people clinging for life to a New Orleans rooftop. Meanwhile, in Alabama, amateur SKYWARN weather nets kept the National Weather Service apprised of conditions throughout the state. In hard-hit sections of Mississippi, hams running off generators and with makeshift antennas were the only means of communication, getting word to out-of-state friends and relatives concerning their loved ones.

There were numerous other instances of hams helping those who were not simply inconvenienced by the storm, but whose lives were in imminent danger. Now that things have calmed down in the Gulf region, many of the emergency nets have stood down. But hams continue to serve the public in the many areas that are still without power or phone service.

As our nation collects itself in the aftermath of the Katrina disaster, President Bush has promised federal reviews of what went right and what went wrong. One of the findings of those inquiries should be that the federally-instituted Amateur Radio Service, which functions under the licensing authority of the FCC, stood tall when the country needed it.

Amateur radio currently faces various threats to its existence. Chief among those is the advent of broadband-over-powerline (BPL) technology, which, if broadly adopted, has the potential to cause widespread interference to HF communications, not just for amateurs but for other services that use the HF spectrum.

Amateurs and the ARRL have made a lot of noise about BPL, asserting that it could seriously hamper their efforts and those of relief agencies such as the Red Cross and Salvation Army, in the event of a disaster such as Katrina. It's rumored, though, that the same FCC commissioners who have given their blessing to BPL field trials will now take a much harder look at the technical issues concerning BPL and its interference potential in the HF spectrum. Let's face it: The federal government didn't handle the emergency in the Gulf very well; it'd be prudent for it not to sanction a technology that could impede one of the few things that actually worked.

Many readers of this newsletter are amateur radio enthusiasts. If you are, and if you haven't already done so, consider writing your congressman to express your concern about the future of the Amateur Radio Service, especially in light of its outstanding efforts in recent days. Remind your elected representatives that a vibrant and unimpeded Amateur service can and will be a lifesaver when disaster strikes. Also, consider how you yourself might help. What if a hurricane, tornado, or earthquake ravages your area? Are you prepared to get on the air without relying on the mains to handle emergency traffic? Get in touch with your local amateur-radio club and find out how you can pitch in.

Your cell phones and wireless routers are indeed great stuff, but so is a good old HF transceiver. We shouldn't always be in such a hurry to let the flood of new technology wash away the old. The geek down the block with all the antennas on his property could turn out to be your best friend someday. Because sometimes, old trumps new.

At that distance you don't even need a 100 watts to elimate their interent completely. The old saying if it causes interference it can be interfered with. I had a leaky cable company amp on the power in front of my rural house. And every time I keyed up on 2 meters everyone up and down the street lost their cable. And they did hear me clear as a bell too, turned out there wasn't anything any government agency would do ecept tell the complainers to call their cable provider. They had it fixed in hours after that. They have no protection from interference on a closed system and had they interferred with my 2 meter station they would have had to shut it down immediately as they are not to interfere outside of their system period.
My neightbour had one of those internal broadband system for distributing interent with in his house over the power lines. I caused him so much grief and it turned out the units where not legal in Canada or the USA. Turned out they were a cheap Chinese copy of a system that was approved but operated in near the 2.4 ghz on a very low level hardwired system. He called to file a complaint and the Industry Canada (Canada's form of the FCC) they wanted the number off the sticker on the back of it and then paid him a visit a couple of days later. I knew the inspectro so he stopped over for a visit and a coffee and told me all about what had happened. It pays to have friends in the right places, hi, hi.
I don't think this BPL is going to make it as the technology is not yet prefected to the point where they will not cause interference on very broad spectrul of the hf, vhf and uhf bands. Motorola has the means and the technology but their system works up in the giga hertz where the bandwidth can be used without interferrring with hardly anything or anyone. Why do you think it's been outlawed in Japan and Austrailia, specially Japan the most advance electronics country in the world. do you honestly think it will last in North Amercia in either country. Do you remember how much of the radio frequency spectrum is assigned to the military, well do you think they will tolerate any kind of interference at all? Not likely and they will make darn sure you don't have the ability to in the future as well.
And then there are the other countries of the globe, it is written that no country shall willingly or unwillingly cause interference with the radio service of another country. Also there is the hf radio broadcast spectrum that is very much a part of the 40 meter band, do you really think they will tolerate interference. It's the bottom line, if the USA and Canada adopt the idea that we can interfere with anyone else, I wonder how long our exportable products will be sold in those countries. Without exports where will our economies go, who's going to be able to afford to pay for an ISP who caused you to loose your job.

Sorry about the long windedness, but this is going to disappear, for one do you really think the airline industry will put up with an ISP interfering with their comunications, not likely. And that's just one example, there are the police, fire and ambulance, the FBI, CIA, RCMP, FAA the list could go on and on.

Before long those that choose to turn it on will have it shut off more than it's on. And then it becomes a black hole for the investors.
If they can put internet 100 miles outside of Anchorage Alaska, or on Elsmer Island, which is 300 miles south of the North Pole where there are no hydro poles or wires, they can put it anywhere without interfering with anyone.

I'm gone

Easy mistake. He's been hearing for decades how Code is Universal.

Now Heil wants ducks to fall into formation? ;^)

I don't see how that will help the civilian reader. It would probably lead to a false sense of insecurity wrt our armed services, and the GAO would probably call it a waste of tax payer money to try to do so.

Given his controlling nature, it sounds more like something that Steve would try, anyway.

Ha. Ha. NO. NO.

I do have the documentation to prove my side of arguments, some of that shown on other websites (links given in here) plus callsigns of personal references. The one I call a FAKE and a disgrace to the United States Marine Corps is Major Dud, aka "Steven J. Robeson."

Why are you defending a FAKE, Heil? Have you seen Dud's DD-214?

Did that make your Johnson bigger?

BTW, you ought to visit the E. F. Johnson website and see the very little Johnsons they now make and sell (www.efji.com).
Much smaller than the old Viking Messenger CB transceiver.

Did you use crypto gear with your Vietnam in-country MARS

Tsk, tsk. A not-nice thing to say, Secret Agent Man. I've had quite enough of security stuff to live with in my career and endured all of it for the good of the country. That includes AEC stuff requiring a "Q" clearance. I've followed each and every directive and have never faulted anything in secure/sensitive matters that could threaten the nation.

Here's a little clue-in, Secret Agent Man: Amateur radio is expressly FORBIDDEN from using any means tending to obscure the meaning of communications. In other words, NO crypto. Further, amateur radio is not, has never been any sort of service to the nation comparable with the military or certain functions of the government of the United States. Don't puff up your AMATEUR Extra ego too far with thoughts of self-aggrandizement for having once been given a security clearance in your employment.

Even further, your past employer (the Department of State) is a secretariat under the administration...and directly involved in foreign policy of the United States. That presidential cabinet function is ripe for CITIZEN commentary by citizens of the United States. You are NOT immune from a stray arrow shot across your brow for having been in "the foreign service." Gives you NO excuse to say you are "better" than ordinary citizens...some will say it makes you worse, but I won't go into that.

It is a puzzle why you wish to exclude citizens of the United States from entering amateur radio. You do that when you say (or imply) that "citizen participation" is a bad thing. Where do you think the newcomers come from, "the foreign service?" Why do you constantly try to block citizens of this country from talking to their government when they have no AMATEUR license?

UNIFORM Code of Military Justice. Yes, my slip.

Such slips might be due to not paying attention SOLELY to the display screen while listening (and sometimes looking at) the TV visible in the family room here from the office room. Maybe it is because we are going to a party in Universal City on Sunday? [there's houses and stores and everything there
besides Universal Studios]

Does Your Worship demand constant attention at all times?
One would think so. You do not equate "all branches equally" with "universal?" Of course not, Herr Literalist.
The correct NAME is most important? Of course it is. To you, so you can leverage some sort of smart-ass snark on those you dislike.

The UCMJ hasn't applied to me or my actions in 45 years. It has NEVER applied to Jimmy Noserve, Katapult Kelly, Kim or Dee. The rest, all anony-mousies we just don't know about.
It may not have applied to Major Dud, either, since Dud hasn't shown proof of his service or his mighty "seven hostile actions."

Not now...but I was for 8 years. I have the documentary evidence to prove it. Dudly don't got any. You got any, mighty warrior working MARS in a "country at war?"

>If you're going to attempt clarification for the civilians among the Duck you, sweetums. What are you going to do? Step before the UN and talk about Weapons of Morse Destruction? The boss of "the foreign service" did something like that, then had the courage to QUIT. Why don't you do that now and save yourself all the anguish opposite opinions cause you?

No, they don't.

"Radio" is a subset of electrical engineering.

"Electronics" is a subset of electrical engineering.

Radio and electronics have some things in common, but they are not identical, and one is not a subset of the other.

Yet FCC disagrees with you, Len.

You see, amateur radio is mainly about operating radios. Sure, some technical knowledge is needed, and some of us do things like design and build our own amateur radio stations (something you've never done, btw.) But the license isn't for building - it's for operating.

Operating is what amateur radio is really all about. All types of operating, with all sorts of modes and equipment. Technical stuff is just a means to that end.

You just don't seem to understand that.

Some disagree with League policies
Some think membership costs too much.
Some are inactive
Some don't understand why a national organization is needed.

Not true, Len.

btw, No-Code International's membership is less than 1% of US amateurs even though there are no dues and NCI membership never expires.

That's because she was in support of continued Morse Code testing.

You have no activity in amateur radio and except for one outburst almost

license.

So you and the English teacher have the same level of involvement.

An amateur license permits the licensee to operate INSIDE the amateur bands, not OUTSIDE.

Why is that important to what happens inside the amateur bands?

"an old friend" <kb9rqz@yahoo.com> wrote

>
> You're not even eligible for QCAO membership! <BSEG>

which ever gruop they are

The QCAO (Quarter Century Appliance Operators) was founded in the early 1950's by a small group of Amateur Radio operators from the Pacific Northwest. They had been active in their hobby for over 25 years, yet still lacked the basic knowledge of radio electronics and had no idea of how their equipment worked.

They banded together to try and protect each others honor and pride. At radio gatherings and club meetings in the 1950s one was considered unworthy of the name Ham Radio Operator if he or she couldn't not only name components, but know how to solder them together and make a radio work, or fix a broken set!

When faced with insults and dreision, those few hardy pioneers banded together and formed the First Chapter and National Organization of the QCAO. This was known as the "Cold Solder" Chapter. They even coined the now-famous club byword
"e pluribus ignoramae" which is Latin for "We don't have to know how to solder, we just wanna talk on our radios."

No veterans of that first chapter are known to be active on the air today. In the late 1950s and early '60s, with the worldwide interest in science and space and technology, the QCAO membership went underground.

It is with great pride and dignity that today in the 21st Century the revived QCAO stands ready to rise from the ashes, and become the standard of mediocrity it once proudly was. In honor of those first pioneering members, QCAO hereby invites all eligible applicants to step forward and join!

The benefits of QCAO include not only the pride of membership. Think of the warm glow you will feel at club meetings and gatherings showing off your new all-plastic imprinted QCAO pocket protector! And that's not all! For your minimal membership fee, you will also receive a handsome, suitable-for-framing, certificate of honor, with hand-lettered name and Charter Membership Number. Other QCAO memorabilia will soon be available for members, including T-shirts, caps, pins, etc. At this date charter membership numbers are still available. Membership requires a 25 years (more or less) interest in Amateur Radio, coupled with a basic ignorance of how radios work and how to repair them.

Think of meeting other QCAO members on the air! No more embarrassing pauses when someone in the QSO mentions an RF choke or a parasitic bleeder...Be able to exchange meaningful sharing, talk about real things, yes, even swap QCAO numbers with each other! And soon perhaps . . . a worldwide QCAO contest!

You no longer have to shrink to the back of the room at post-meeting sessions of your radio club. Just display your QCAO protector and others will be able to identify you immediately. Who knows? Perhaps one of the originals from that old QCAO Chapter is just waiting for you to find him. Join now! Remember "We don't have to know how to solder, we just wanna talk on our radios"! Don't let technoids embarrass you and kick jargon in your face. Stand up for what's right! Join QCAO!

He knows he'd be proven wrong, if the Icom receiver is within its specs as manufactured and he has more than a rain gutter to attach to its antenna port. There's enough RF floating around Los Angeles County this weekend to lift Len's receiver off the table.

Len is driven by such things. He desperately needs to prove that morse has no place in "modern" communications.

>But not by direct radio contact.

Most absolutely INCORRECT, Jim-Jim.

DIRECT from a maritime transceiver as a civilian. DIRECT from a government radio transmitter. DIRECT as in laying on of hands, moving controls, operating, all that stuff.

Then why do you fuss with morse and standards that are over 70 years old?

>You sure talk about it a lot, though.

You were born before 1951? YOU talked much of it in previous post.

YOU have talked much about Reggie Fessenden and his carbon-mike-in-the-antenna "AM voice transmission" of 1906 and (allegedly) 1900.

Are you 105 years old?!?

>> Jimmy Noserve loves the past, always

>Gee, Len, you're always bringing up little factoids of >history that happened before your time.

When did MY "time" begin, Jimmy? My "first radio job" in HF comms began in 1953. I was there then, did it, came back. Never used any morse code then on three dozen transmitters, never had to.

>Are you the only one allowed to do that?

Tsk, you are getting disturbed. Calm down, just keep on bringing up all those tidbits of "radio history" as you need to. Be mindful of some critics, though. Not all of those are me. :-)

>"Radio" is a subset of electrical engineering.

Incorrect. It is a part of electronics, a technology discipline.

>"Electronics" is a subset of electrical engineering.

INCORRECT.

Electronics is one TECHNOLOGY DISCIPLINE of physics.

Didn't Dexter teach you the correct way to look at physics...like everyone else does?

>Radio and electronics have some things in common, but they are not >identical, and one is not a subset of the other.

Amateur radio definitions seldom jibe with the rest of the world of electronics...and radio. :-)

>> Do you consider U.S. amateur radio to be a HOBBY?

And, of course, YOU do so much more... :-)

Have you defeated any enemies of Homeland Security with your amateur morsemanship?

Have you saved any lives in the Gulf States with your amateur morsemanship?

Yes, MY OPINION! :-) Do you think someone else is writing

Why is that a factor in AMATEUR radio?

>Your politeness isn't exactly legendary, Len.

Tsk, your definition of "polite" seems to be everyone agreeing with you and giving your gratuitous praise for whatever you do.

<shrug>

>How did they pass their written tests if they're so ignorant? Did >they get a look at a 1957 Extra test?

Why is that important here...other than satisfying your nasty little nyah-nyahs?

>Yet FCC disagrees with you, Len.

No, sweetums, YOU disagree with me. YOU are NOT the FCC.

>Operating is what amateur radio is really all about. All types of >operating, with all sorts of modes and equipment.

INCORRECT. Modes and frequencies are specifically allocated and given in Part 97, Title 47 C.F.R. NOT "all types" as you state. [tsk, tsk] NOT "all sorts of modes" since those are limited. NOT "all sorts of equipment" either since there are exceptions stated in Part 97. Look those up.

>Technical stuff is just a means to that end.

Unimportant? Hardly important? Irrelevant?

Then why do you permit the FCC to keep all those TECHNICAL regulations?

>You just don't seem to understand that.

I just don't understand YOU, Jimmy.

Jimmy boy, YOU are a League BELIEVER. You are so far into bias on that that all you generate are square waves.

>btw, No-Code International's membership is less than 1% of US amateurs Highly irrelevant. NCI is NOT a "national association for amateur radio." It exists for ONE purpose: Elimination of the code test from amateur radio license examinations worldwide. That's it.

>You have no activity in amateur radio and except for one outburst almost >six years ago, there's no indication you'll ever get an amateur license.

"Outburst?!?" BWAAAAAHAHAHAHAHAHAH!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

Why, oh WHY must I show "an indication of interest?!?"

Who the fork are you to presume I MUST demonstrate to YOU some kind of committment and dedication?!?!?

If your ego is THAT big, then you should go over to Coslo's BBS since you will "reach the threashold of space" long before his big balloon will...

>So you and the English teacher have the same level of involvement.

Nope. I am as involved as can be with my wife. None other.

As a bachelor I had an "involvement" with an English teacher,
a very nice one, in fact.

Try to think about marriage for YOU, Jimmy. It would make you less of a one-track Believer.

>You're not a licensee and and except for one outburst almost

Oh, oh, there goes that control-freak EGO again, Jimmy.

Work on that. It's bad socially.

Irrelevant. Chances are they will take my comments seriously.

Tsk, there you go again with nasty attitude. An evangelical Believer,
wet proselyte for a battery of morse gods, an acidic base.

Jimmy boy, I'm quite aware of the EM spectrum and who occupies what "bands." Have been for a very long time...ever since getting my "first job in radio." I know spectrum occupany OUTSIDE of the ham bands on HF, on MF, on VHF, on UHF, and on up to 2.4 GHz. WHAT are YOU going to tell ME? That contests are "popular?" I could find that out by seeing the boosterism for that in print in CQ or QST.

Is contesting "operation" your main interest in amateur radio?
Are you more interested in awards, trophies, pretty certificates than radio for radio's sake? It sure sounds like it since you love getting praise, even from friends and neighbors. :-)

This Thursday and Friday I was involved in Thanksgiving in the literal sense. Good friends got together, didn't talk at all about amateur radio or morse code. Sunday is another nice get-together with good people, and I don't expect any of the talk will be about amateur radio or morse code or contests or the beeping state of the radio art. No "contests" of any real kind. Sunnuvagun!

Have fun in your amateur beeping contests. Those sound very,
Very, VERY important to you. Enjoy.

hobby to dismiss it.

*My arguement also for the continued usefulness of CB radio. Not a replacement for the mobile phone or internet but another communications option especially if the s_it hits the fan. Phones and the internet cant do what the CB does, and vice versa so why not embrace the three. Amateur doesnt need embracing as its there and its not for the general public. It use just needs accepting by the authorities a bit more even though its been proved time and time again.

Sending DLS (Internet) over powerlines uses either 1.8 to 32 MHz
or 3 to 21 Mhz.
Of cause in the first case CB is also affected.

The signal strength was measured by the gov, and found to be 111.639 times the allowed limit....
They had to reduce it a factor 111.639 to make even digital radio reception (DRM (Digital Radio Mondial) ) possible.

New tests are running, here is an original article in German:
http://www.heise.de/newsticker/meldung/66673

As internet over powerlines is also considered in the US, I think US amateurs and CB people should strongly protest too.

These guys got the license to operate 'because it is cable,
and that is not regulated like radio'.
Of cause powerlines are not shielded, and high up there, the perfect VERY long antennas....

;-) Maybe if the conditions are good you will be able to get free internet from Austria in the US. ;-)

Actually, any Boy Scout can read code. Hams have their own jargon, for efficiency, but one need not be a fully licensed ham to read a code message. One only need be informed. That can be anybody.

While that may seem to be true, the chaos on the 11 meter band is evidence of just how unworkable 11 meters would be in an emergency. Yes, it would work, and yes, anyone would be able to use it. However, the advantage hams have in an emergency is the discipline and understanding of protocols to be able to get a message through crowded bands, without creating any new interference. Most untrained operators, not all, but most by far, would simply get on the radio and start talking regardless of who is there first. This, coupled with CB's limited local range would be more of an impediment than trained hams working limited allocations in fewer numbers. In an emergency, the 11 meter band may simply not be sufficiently open to make CB a practical alternative to the amateur service.

Amateur operators would have a power advantage, as well, exceeding 200 times the CB user's power output.

Non hams do not understand the long standing traditions of the amateur net--a group, or network of hams working together to get messages from any part of the world to any other part of the world, either acting as phone relay stations or as traffic handlers relaying content. Those networks have existed since Maxim, and are already in place. They exist from coast to coast on all bands. CB does not have such a tradition. Primarily because long distance communication, by the rules of the charter of the service prohibit long distance. But realistically, CB operators are simply not organized into networks ready and willing to move traffic. Most REACT teams are as unable to get a message through a crowded band as any other operator. 5 watts when untrained users are screaming for assistance all at once is not sufficient to overcome the noise.

Further, ham operators are uniquely able, and qualified to improvise communications where non exist. There are bands throughout the spectra with propagation characteristics unique to needs of the moment. Hams know where and when these characteristics are available. CB users do not. Ham operators are legally permitted to improvise equipment, as well, often cobbling together equipment of many types, modifying as they go, to create the combination of hardware necessary to their needs. All they have to do is operate within the bands, and refrain from creating interference. Short of that, only the individual's technical limitations are a factor. CB users, however, frequently don't have the technical expertise to improvise. Even if they did, such improvisation on the 11 meter band is prohibited. Only type accepted hardware is permitted, and it may not be modified by the end user. Few CB operators are licensed to service their own radios. In an emergency, they'd be limited by the functionality and serviceability of the hardware at hand. Ham radio operators, on the other hand, would have no limitations except that they must operate within the bands, and the emissions must not create interference.

So, while it may seem true that CB is open to everyone and a far better option that a licensed service, reality begs to differ.

What's unfortunate, is that the CB mentality has begun to affect the amateur service, as well. The sense of community and public service has been eroded by those who don't know, nor do they care, about the public service aspect of amateur radio. And the responsibilities of being a part of the service.

> How are they doing this? in what way? Who are they talking to?

Emergency generators in private hands are still considered a rarity by most. Not the case. I live in Suburban Chicago. Half of my neighbors have generators. I have a 20,000 watt generator that I can kick in when the power goes down--a trick I learned from my grandfather. Hams who participated in DXpeditions, or field days often have generators to power their rigs. As a second tier backup, I"ve got a 1000 watt inverter that I can power with the battery on my car. With the heavy duty three phase alternator I installed, I can keep that battery alive simply by starting the car and letting it run for an hour or two every so often.

If one wants to, there are always methods of being prepared for power outtage.

As for who they're talking to? Other hams. There are a lot of them out there. And many in any given community.

Exactly my point. Broadcast is not the goal. Point to point communication is. And that's where hams excel. Because they know how to work together, not only to limit interference, but to move traffic.
They're organized. They're disciplined. They don't broadcast to the masses. They have a plan, and it's already in place. You are but one with a radio and an intent. So are hundreds of others in your region.
None of you have gotten together to create a strategy to handle communications in an emergency. Chaos threatens.

A good analogy is the a football stadium. Organized individuals could move a message around the stadium during a game. While those 'ready to broadcast to the masses,' would simply begin calling out to whoever hears them. As they do when the ball nears the goal.
Organization would get an intelligible message through the noise. While the unorganized would BE the noise.

One sec. You are also simply going on about civilians... where do the police come into it? Their radios are knocked out and they need communications.
They cant use amateur bands because they arent licenced.... they can use CB's though cant they?

I dont think you understood what i meant. I didnt mean use CB instead of Amateur. I cant see why the both cant be used side by side.

> Amateur operators would have a power advantage, as well, exceeding

Dont forget were talking about local'ish communications here not wide ranging communication. The information only needs to be put out to somewhere with power and unaffected. Also power wise theres a good few set ups on the CB band out there with plenty of power. You go on about legally but were talking natural disaster times here and i doubt if everyone sits reading rule books to see what they can do.

Like i said, side by side not instead of. Dont forget a lot of these screaming untrained users wont be able to use their sets due to homebase power cuts and in NO case, flooded vehicals but it wouldnt take long to organise some sort of communication set up via CB in these instances. It only needs a few experienced CB operators to make it viable. There are some clever organised CB groups out there which you overlook just as the politician chappie in charge tried to brush off radio Amateurs... we dont need their help... remember? Your doing exactly the same thing. The more communications channels in an emergancy the better.

You dont need adapted hardware. Were talking local communications here not trying to get out round the world. The CB service is perfectly adiquate for this.

Pedantic reply there. You knew perfectly well what i meant which was to get information about and communicate to those in range (remember the repeaters being knocked out)

And that's where hams excel. Because they know how to Bollocks........ only the Hams who have been trained for such events have plans in place

You are but one
> with a radio and an intent. So are hundreds of others in your region.

Internet wouldnt be an issue... knocked out remember. As will have most of the incapable users of CB. Only the ones prepaired "with a plan" would be on air ready to organise. Or do you think anyone who isnt an Amateur couldnt organise anything. I know a few Amateurs who couldnt organise their breakfasts in the mornings never mind anything else.

Trumpet blowing for ones own service and nothing else. As far as perfect Hams go, you seem to think they are all angels and well organised. Well unless they have been recruited and actually trained for such events then they would be as useless as the next person. Not all Hams are as you imply.

You also seem to repeatedly go on about one or the other service. Like i said earlier and was not picked up on as your own trumpet was deafening you, both services could have run side by side perfectly fine. CB for the general organising of local issues and policing and Amateur for the longer distance more drafting in supplies side of things and keeping outsiders informed....

One editorial had some interesting things to say about emergency comms

Your half-vast research has nailed you again, Len. You got it flat wrong. Just pure and simple mistaken, Len.

Each ENLISTMENT results in a new DD214. I have one four, even though I had no breaks in service (did not "go into civilian life, then rejoin again"). Block 11c on the earlier ones, block 9c on later one are captioned "Reason and Authority". In each case (except the last one) that block contains the reason "To immediately reenlist."

In each case the reenlistment was "PRIOR to ending the contracted term" of the previous "hitch".

No "forgery".... no broken service.... no gun-decking..... no transfer to another service, yet I have four DD214's and two DD215's, all carrying the official embossed seal of NARA.

Here comes Digital TV !!

http://www.dtv.gov/

(....otherwise known as the FCC's pending DISASTER when regular analog broadcasting goes off the air and suddenly millions upon millions of TV sets suddenly are "obsolete" and no longer work)

Can you just imagine what will happen the first weekend after the DTV shi+ hits the fan and Bubba can't watch his BALL GAMES or his NASCAR on his, now utterly useless TeeVee...?
Unless of course he buys a $100 set-top converter box for every TV Want to talk about an excuse for rioting in the streets? Here it is, or will be soon!
Not to mention also the fact that DTV will cause RFI to public service commnications to go thru the roof, including cell phones which will be useless anywhere near the transmitter. (this should be fun)

http://www.dtv.gov/consumercorner.html#obsolete

"The target date for the end of the transition from analog to digital television signals is December 31, 2008.
That date may be extended, however, until most homes (85%) in an area are able to watch the DTV programming. At that point, broadcasting the current ï¿½analogï¿½ channels will end and that spectrum will be put to other uses. Until the transition to DTV is complete, television stations will continue broadcasting on both their digital and analog channels."

DTV broadcast is HIGHLY prone to multipath distortion problems caused by shortcomings of the 8-channel vestigial sideband (8VSB) transmission standard, which has been mandated for use by all broadcasters in the United States by the Federal Communications Commission. In short, if you think it was hard to get TV reception back in the 60's and 70's before cable using a pair of rabbit ears then you ain't seen nothing yet! With DTV you get nothing if even one bit is missing from the broadcast stream. Black screen DOA.

Finally, here is the URL of the people who pushed this pending disaster thru Congress: http://www.dtvcoalition.com/

consumers are likely to react in anger when their sets

You speak for their mission, but is that what members of this organization would say of themselves? And did they even know that when they turned the radio on it was electrical energy that was helping it work--or did they even lack that knowledge of how their equipment worked? How deep was their ignorance and, at what point would one say they were "worthy" of being called an amateur radio operator (even though it seems that merely to be licensed by the FCC deems one as an amateur radio operator).

What honor and pride? Are you saying they "bought into" that whole concept, or did they actually exclude themselves as honorable amateur radio operators simply because of what others may have thought of them?

Ah. It seems you've answered some of the first questions I had. However, why are you limiting this sentiment to the 1950s? This sentiment exists today in amateur radio.

Good for them. It sounds like a great opportunity to respectfully dig back at any attempts from others to say one is disqualified even if they have met the requirements of the licensing system.

One of my points exactly. If someone really is such an awful amateur radio operator, they'll disappear from the airwaves soon enough (well, myself excluded :o).

Sounds like most of the amateur radio club organizations I've been witness to over the years. A few who know "a lot" about radios (if even they are so expert at it that they find it too far beneath them to join in the community of amateur radio and do some public service, etc.); with the rest of the membership being those who may not know all that much about radio but of whom many are quite willing to learn from the best, and of whom many become the support structure for the local amateur radio community and emergency services.

Wow, ya mean no more pauses as others try to figure out the relevance of why someone just butted into the QSO with that kind of chatter? Cool.

I've found that most of those who are labeled "appliance operators" at club gatherings already know each other real well because they are the most involved in the amateur community. And, while the solderers have been busy yakking and impressing each other with all that stuff (truly important for the heritage, yes, but not necessary knowledge in today's world), those "appliance operators" have researched the internet for the best of the best, have saved their money up and equipped themselves for most emergency situations and are ready for public service with the touch of a few buttons and the attachment of a few connections. YMMV.

Most people already have the necessary converter. It's called a cable box. The STBs for the rest of the peeps will most likely be ca $25.
Closer to that than $100.

The mayor was only confirming what many of us in this hobby realize:
Ham radio operators have not served any useful purpose in emergency communications for a long time. The professionals pretty much ignore them. At most they talk to one-another in health and welfare nets and if someone actually calls in with an emergency all hell breaks loose because everyone wants to talk personally with the ham calling in.

Hams have this vision of themselves as the emergency communicators who while huddled in a dark storm beaten shack will get through to the outside world and save the day by using a car battery and some jury-rigged cw setup. And the hams on the outside see themselves as the unique link on the other end who will alert the authorities and direct them to the site before anyone else can because they alone have a connection with the emergency site. It's little more than mental masturbation folks 'cause the real world doesn't work that way.

Oh, really? High-quality, flat-response tuner / IF strip / demodulator, plus a scan convertor to convert from any of the gazillion digital formats to NTSC, and RF modulator and power supply, all for $25 consumer price?

Mitt Romney is a Republican. IIRC, he moved to Massachusetts from Utah around the time of the last Winter Olympics, didn't he? MA has a habit of electing Republican governors. Sounds unlikely, but you can look it up.

People talk like this whole DTV conversion is coming as a surprise.
It's been planned and in the news regularly for the last decade (literally). This isn't some overnight switheroo that Congress is trying to pull. There's been plenty of advance notice. If some people choose to ignore the news and are surprised four years from now when they can't watch regular TV (and that is only if they receive over the air only, which applies to roughly less than 15% of the country), so be
it.

Personally I'm looking forward to the highly increased picture quality and digital surround sound that DTV can provide. If some people want to stick with their 1950s technology, so be it; but don't hold it against those of us who want to move into the 21st century, thank you very much. Many parts of the world like Japan and Western Europe have pretty much moved to DTV already, and those countries haven't been engulfed in mobs of angry people who can't watch TV anymore.

The problem isn't moving into the 21st Century, Mr. Futuristic Modern Dude.
We're already there. The problem is removing the existing broadcasts.

There'd be room for everyone if Congress wasn't so easily bought by commercial interests bent on forcing the public to throw away literally TRILLIONS OF DOLLARS worth of equipment.

I'm as far from a treehugger as one can get, but have you given any thought whatever to the landfill problem when hundreds of millions of television sets suddenly need landfill for disposal?

That's completely silly. No one could make anything for $25 if they are forced to do it in runs of ten or fifteen at a time because the suppliers don't have parts.

Here you might have something... except the chip has to be about 25 cents to pass the rule of 10. Figure $8 in 10,000 qty, then your set top box might make $100.

Do you remember that amateur radio is done for the love of radio? The internet isn't amateur radio. A cellular telephone isn't amateur radio. If you'd like to spend your days on the internet, that's fine. If your thing is spending money to telephone folks via cellular phone, then have at it.

Many radio amateurs did so. Jim is quite some distance from the scenes

That sounds like sour grapes on your part, Leonard. Those of us who took and passed such an exam demonstrated that we'd reached a certain level of competence in what is a useful skill in amateur radio.

Well, Lennie boy, what is it that you believe in? Do you believe that the ARRL is an evil organization? You've leveled charges of dishonesty toward the League, but you never substantiated them.

There seems to have been at least one exception to that stated purpose already.

I prefer to call it an episode of braggadocio. It has come back to haunt you repeatedly.

One reason could be that you'd be seen as something other than a sidewalk superintendent in amateur radio. If you have no interest, as you've alternately claimed, you are irrelevant to amateur radio and you become a kook who haunts an amateur radio newsgroup.

> Who the fork are you to presume I MUST demonstrate to YOU

"Commitment", Len. Nobody forces you to show commitment or dedication. You needn't obtain or even attempt to obtain an amateur radio license. If you don't, you won't appear to be very credible. Your extensive rants will be marginalized. You'll be in the same boat as a certain English teacher.

Sure, Leonard, and you're getting an "Extra right out of the box".

When it was said that you have the same level of involvement as the English teacher, you said, "I am as involved as can be with my wife. None other". Here you seem to indicate that marriage makes one "less of a one-track Believer". You can't even agree with you.

Nobody is controlling you, including yourself. You shot off your mouth when you made your boast six years ago. You haven't lived up to that billing.

If you think that's bad socially, you should be in the shoes of one who shoots off his yap, saying he's going to do something, but who doesn't follow through.

It matters. How many times were you "the public" in regard to 05-235? Of the members of the PUBLIC who spoke, how many (excluding you) didn't share your view?

Well, Lennie boy, you'll find those radio amateur morse signals at the low end of the bands marked "160, 80, 40, 20, 15 and 10 meters" this weekend. They're there all the time but you'll find them in profusion this weekend.

It'd be tough to reach you. You spend too much time with your transmitter on and not enough time using the receiver.

Was the intent to prove that contests are popular or was it to show that morse code is alive and well in amateur radio?

What would any of that be to you, Len? You aren't in amateur radio and you wouldn't even turn on your receiver to find if the morse code is alive and well.

I went to an apple festival this fall. No one there talked about amateur radio or morse code. Is that supposed to prove that morse code is dead? I didn't hear a single person there discussing NASA, Darwin or jazz either.

Thanks for your good wishes. Those things are far more important to me than obtaining an amateur radio license seems to be for you. Your participation is not required.

have you ever talked to a ham? There is a reason behind the "hat" (antenna). And the call sign well it identifies who we are.... we are not queer, just a bit of an unusual breed.
Ham radio is fun and you get to meet some interesting characters on the air waves. give it a try one of these times it isn't that hard to study for the license.

Amateur radio is only as helpful as the people in it, but there are PLENTY of stories of assistance by hams in the recent storms including one where the hams on scene in New Orleans LOANED HF equipment to the National Guard

All I see here is a high shade of envy and sour grapes towards hams who Wowsers! All that time abroad and all of those postings, you'd think someone would have told me about that "secretariat under the administration" stuff. You say we were involved in the foreign policy of the U.S. government? Well.

Well, if State ever starts issuing its own crypto material, I suggest you implement a letter writing campaign and involve yourself.

If I've ever received an arrow across the bow, Len, it has been one of your strays. Actually, you've shot many stray arrows for my having been in the Foreign Service.

> Gives you NO excuse to

It is probably a good thing that I've not done so, huh?

> ...some will say
> it makes you worse, but I won't go into that.

I think the only folks who'd do such a thing would be left-wing crackpots.

> It is a puzzle why you wish to exclude citizens of the United

I've never wished nor attempted to exclude anyone who could overcome inertia and pass the required exams. You're surely not saying that anyone who desires an amateur radio license should be handed one.

> You do that when you say > (or imply) that "citizen participation" is a bad thing.

...in issuing crypto material?

You've participated in commenting to your government. You even made insulting comments directed toward at least one individual who was also commenting to his government.

> Where do you think the newcomers come from, "the foreign > service?"

Why, as a matter of fact, some do. I've participated in overseas exam sessions during which at least one Foreign Service employee, one Defense Attache Office member and one cleared American guard became radio amateurs.

> Why do you constantly try to block citizens of How have I tried to block you from talking to your government, Len? Did you suggest that the government discount the views of Mr. Rightsell?

Nice try, however:

As usual, ham radio operators help sustain wide-ranging relief efforts
By Andrea Kelly
ARIZONA DAILY STAR

When all else fails, it's ham radio to the rescue. Across Arizona, ham radio operators are helping sustain Hurricane Katrina relief efforts by helping storm-torn communities communicate with rescue workers and family across the country.

This is not a first. Ham radio operators come out of the woodwork during disasters around the world, even transmitting in Morse code if language barriers pop up, said Mike Swiader, president of the amateur Superstition Radio Club in Mesa.

Ham radio operators have contributed to emergency communication efforts since World War II, Swiader said, and were crucial in post-9/11 emergency communications, as well as during the Asian tsunami last holiday season.

Ham radios work when other communication systems are down because they're powered by solar energy, batteries or generators rather than the usual power sources.

The messages are passed from radio to radio until they get to the one they are directed to, so radios don't need to be near each other to receive signals, like regular AM/FM radio signals.

"We've been involved in passing traffic to and from the Louisiana and Mississippi area," said Tom Fagan, a leader of the Arizona ham radio operators organization. "Whatever needs to come in and go out, we're doing."

When Arizona's ham operators - there are about 16,000 of them - get messages from the hurricane area, they send them along to agencies like the American Red Cross and the Salvation Army in the Southeastern region of the country.

"We're the link," Fagan said.

Because communications within a disaster area are often jumbled, Swiader said, it's frequently easier for someone there to contact an operator in someplace like Arizona, who can then relay the message back to a recipient in the disaster area.

"Sometimes it's easier to be heard that way," he said.

More than 30 ham radio operators from Arizona have already headed toward the disaster area, hoping to assist relief efforts and give emergency workers a way to communicate with each other, as well as assisting searches for missing persons.

"They're moving in when they're allowed by American Red Cross and Salvation Army," said Ned Stearns, a Phoenix ham operator and vice director of the American Radio Relay League, the national organization for ham operators.

In fact, the ham operators plan to compile a list of people they can determine as missing, deceased, alive or unknown, based on information transmitted over the ham signals.

To find out about people in the area, visit www.satern.org and fill out the health and welfare information request for the person you are trying to find. This information will be sent through the Salvation Army emergency radio network.

Ham radio operators are helping from afar
Sunday, September 11, 2005
By DONNA FORK
For the Times dfork@knology.net

But sometimes, even the airwaves can be shut down

They also serve who listen and wait.

Huntsville amateur radio operator Douglas Hilton and other "hams" in North Alabama are helping victims of Hurricane Katrina by relaying messages between families, officials and each other.

Lately, Hilton's been spending most of his spare time in his "ham shack" listening to calls for assistance. The systems analyst for Intergraph Corp. is one of thousands of amateur radio operators who help people during emergencies.

Hilton is unusual in the ham radio world because he wears three hats: He is an amateur operator; a member of the Alabama State Defense Force, heading the Communications Platoon for North Alabama; and he's also a military communicator authorized to use the Military Affiliate Radio System.

His connection to the military (although he is a civilian) gives him access to additional radio frequencies most amateurs can't access. He has been a ham radio operator for 42 years; his father had him build a crystal radio when he was 7 years old, and he got his ham license as a teenager. But he wasn't all that active until after the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001.

"That hit me right between the eyes," he recalled, and he began to get back into "hamming."

Now Hilton averages about 100 hours a month on the airwaves and takes countless courses and certifications. He noted that amateur radio operators are "amateurs only in that we're not paid." In return for service "the government gives us frequencies."

Hilton said the North Alabama ham community is large.

"The astronauts are all ham radio operators," he said, noting that astronaut Owen Garriott "was the first ham in space."

Hilton''s "ham shack" is not really a shack at all. It is located in a formal dining room - complete with crystal chandelier. It includes six radios and two computers.

"You don't need six, but don't tell my wife, please," Hilton said as his wife, Diane, laughed. She recently obtained her "technician class" license, which is the entry-level license for ham radio operators. The next is "general class." The highest, which Hilton has, is "amateur extra." Anyone can be an amateur radio operator, Hilton said. There is no age limit: Hilton knows a local ham who is 18 and another who is 89.

It doesn't cost much to be an operator either, he said. A beginner could purchase enough equipment to get started for about $300. Courses are free through one of the local ham radio clubs, of which there are several, including the Huntsville Amateur Radio Club (the Web address is www.harc.net).

In addition to six radios, Hilton has two computers: a laptop and a desktop. "The radios are hooked into the computer." With his setup, the Hiltons can talk to other hams as far away as Japan.

But for the past two weeks there hasn't been time to chat about matters such as which antennas they like the best. There are emergency frequencies to monitor. At the moment, a critical one is the Salvation Army's emergency frequency, Hilton said.

Hilton never knows if it will be a busy night or a quiet one. Recent solar flares have added to the uncertainty because they disrupt communications. Friday, during the late afternoon and early evening, it was unusually quiet.

"I'm a little surprised," he said Friday. "I can't believe how dead these bands are."

Solar flare

It could be a solar flare, or could be something else. "That's the problem, you never know," he said. The waiting, the listening, "it wears you out." But it's worth it when you hear a voice and "you might be the only person who can hear this guy."

On Thursday night, when Hilton was expecting problems, reception was fine. He was able to contact two operators in Louisiana. He also heard one Mississippi ham talking to another ham "so at least one is working there."

ecause of the Hurricane Katrina disaster, there are thousands of messages piling up, waiting to be delivered by ham radio operators: What will happen when all their radios start working again?

People like Hilton will be extremely busy. There are thousands of ham radio operators in Louisiana and Mississippi. When they all get back to the airwaves, it will be quite a challenge to sort out all the messages.

But meanwhile, as they waited for the deluge of messages, on Thursday night the Huntsvillians received a call for help from New Mexico.

Maura Campbell Kingston of Clovis, N.M., was trying to reach her aunt, 76-year-old Sister Joan Campbell, a nun, of Harvey, La. Kingston called the Salvation Army, which contacted a ham radio operator, who called Hilton.

Hilton tried Thursday to reach a radio operator in Louisiana to check on Campbell, but almost all of them were off the air. Finally on Friday night Hilton got through to "KG5YK," who is Robert A. Turner of Elm Grove, La.

When Turner's message came through, hams from all over the United States could be heard, eager to talk with him.

Helping 'ham brother'

The outpouring of sympathy could not be contained: Radio operators from Texas, Indiana and elsewhere all expressed their support for their "ham brother" in Louisiana.

"I hope this never happens again," said Turner of the Katrina disaster. "It's been a tough time. ... I'm looking for the right words." He thanked the other hams for their all their help.

"You'd do the same for us," the ham from Texas said. Others echoed his sentiments.

Turner gave Hilton information about when to call with his "health and welfare message" about Kingston's aunt. Hilton vowed to keep trying to deliver the message "for as long as it takes."

But that proved to be unnecessary.

Friday night, after calling her aunt repeatedly, Kingston finally reached her by phone. She was still at her home in Harvey.

"She was OK," Kingston said in a telephone interview Saturday. "Harvey stayed dry." But the area was without power and Campbell "was sitting in the dark with her flashlight."

Later, Kingston called Hilton to thank him. She said he told her: "I'm just doing it because I want to help."

Kingston was impressed.

"I believe that thing about Southern hospitality."

Ham radio proves to be more than a hobby
By Jeannetta Edwards

Daily Times Leader

When Hurricane Katrina hit, telephone and cell phone communication hit an impasse because of downed lines and towers. But, amateur radio operators did not miss a beat or a transmission.

"Before and after the hurricane, this has proven to be the most reliable form of communication," said Randall O'Brien, a retired highway patrolman who has been involved with ham radio operation for 35 years.

"People thought when they got cell phones, they didn't need us anymore," said O'Brien, an advanced licensed operator, who often talks to missionaries in South and Central America.

According to Denver Baker, Clay County has more than 30 amateur radio operators, but only a small fraction are active.

"It's a wonderful hobby," said Baker, whose wife recently received her technician license.

The multi-faceted operation includes digital and satellite communication and is enjoyed by all age levels.

"This is a good hobby for seniors or for young people," said Baker.

By becoming a ham radio operator, which requires taking a test to obtain a license, people can communicate with others anywhere in the world.

"The classes for the test are free," said Baker, "and we help you with everything you need to know."

According to Baker, who has been enjoying this hobby for the last 10 years, the only investment required is the fee for the test and the purchase of equipment. A handheld transmitter cost around $100.

The self-policing group ensures that everyone adheres to the rules and regulations.

"We're called amateur radio operators, but there's nothing amateur about it," said O'Brien, who first became interested in electronic at age 13.

The group, which also belongs to the American Radio Relay League, meets monthly in West Point.

"We have a good bunch of hams in this area," said Baker. "We bring food at our meetings and have a good time."

"It's nice, especially for seniors," said Baker.

For information on getting involved in ham radio operation, call O'Brien at 494-2898 or Baker at 494-9096.

Ham Radio Operators Offer Help

By Beth Hahn
Mountain View Telegraph
Since Hurricane Katrina hit New Orleans last week, several ears in the East Mountains and Estancia Valley have been tuned to amateur short-wave radios.
McIntosh resident Ed Brooks said local Ham radio operators are willing to relay messages from the Gulf Coast if needed.
"We guys here in the Estancia Valley are just listening," he said. "We haven't had any need for what we can offer."
Although they may not be needed yet, Brooks said local Ham radio operators are still listening in to conversations taking place in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama.
During the interview with Brooks, his Ham radio was tuned to a conversation involving a Coast Guard helicopter that was rescuing a family from a rooftop in New Orleans with direction from another Ham radio operator.
Brooks said similar situations have been broadcast hundreds of times during the past week.
"It's been really spotty, but what we've been (hearing) is that it was good fortune that somebody down there had Ham equipment," he said.
Daryl Clutter, an Edgewood Ham operator and member of the Salvation Army's shortwave network, said he relayed a message from Ontario to U.S. Coast Guard officials in Washington, D.C., that originated in Louisiana.
"It was just the word 'help' spelled out two times," he said.
Like Brooks, Clutter said he has stayed close to his Ham radio since Aug. 29.
"There's been so much going on," he said. "Every day, something happens."
Clutter, a former truck driver who often delivered frozen food to the Gulf Coast, said radio traffic has slowed since the hurricane devastated the region.
"You just wonder who all you know, that used to be your customers down there, that are still alive or had the good sense to get out," he said.
As amateur radio operators, Clutter said, Ham enthusiasts practice for disasters "every day."
"There's only so many cell phone frequencies," he explained. "If the phone system goes down, there's no way ... (one company) could handle all the 60,000 or 70,000 phone calls."

Mountainair resident and Ham operator Bob Scupp said the Salvation Army network alone has handled more than 128,000 messages since Aug. 29.
Brooks said Ham operators have been relaying messages from residents to volunteers or emergency personnel. Since a large number of National Guard and military personnel have arrived in the area, Brooks said the messages have changed from pleas for help to questions about well-being.
Shelters for evacuees are beginning to utilize Ham radios to communicate with other shelters to help families find missing relatives, Brooks said.
Rescues are still going on.
"There's been instances where they're still finding people, trapped in houses, trapped in buildings or running out of oxygen," said Clutter. "It's just terrible what's going on down there."
Clutter and Brooks said they will not offer assistance unless someone requests contact in the Albuquerque area.
"We don't want to tie up the frequencies," Brooks said.
Clutter and Brooks said they will continue to listen to their Ham radios for messages or relay requests until communications are restored in the Gulf Coast.
"We live and breathe this," Clutter said.

Amateur radio operators provide vital communications support
By Teresa Atkerson
MCALESTER NEWS-CAPITAL (MCALESTER, Okla.)
MCALESTER, Okla. -

With more than 10,000 requests for help in finding loved ones, the amateur radio operators in Louisiana are extremely busy.

In fact, they are so busy, they have asked people to wait with their requests unless there is an extreme emergency.

Ralph Suter, with the Pittsburg County Amateur Radio Club, said they had about a half dozen requests for assistance in locating loved ones in the area devastated by Hurricane Katrina. ï¿½The Red Cross funneled the requests for health and welfare,ï¿½ he explained. Now, the national traffic system is backed up with the requests, he said, because there were so many.

There are extreme problems with communications in New Orleans at the present time. Suter explained VHF radio has to have line of sight while amateur radio operators can use lower frequencies that can bounce off or curve to get the message through. ï¿½A benefit of amateur radio is you can throw a piece of wire in a tree or up a flagpole. With 12 volts of power, you can operate on a local or even worldwide basis,ï¿½ he explained.

As an example, Suter said recently an amateur radio operator in Louisiana had some kind of problem that he couldnï¿½t get help with after the hurricane. He put out the message, it went through Washington state to Texas and then into Louisiana where the right people were found to help him.

Amateur radio operators can also communicate via Morse Code, upload through television or computer or radio to satellite, Suter said. That gives them even more advantages in communication.

Jim Russell, president of the PCARC, said amateur radio has been around as long as there has been radio. Even in World War I, amateur radio operators helped with messages in Morse Code, which is something operators today still must learn as part of their licensing process.

ï¿½We look at it as a hobby,ï¿½ Suter said. ï¿½Itï¿½s a resource of individuals because they have an interest to develop the skills to operate radios in various modes.

ï¿½Itï¿½s a resource for trained communicators.ï¿½

There are forms that must be used when transmitting messages. ï¿½When it goes into the system at one point and comes out at the destination, it is exactly the same information, even with the misspelled words,ï¿½ Suter said. ï¿½Itï¿½s our responsibility when handling traffic that it comes out exactly as it comes in.ï¿½

Suter said many of the operators use their radios on a daily basis while others check weekly. When it comes to disasters, there is the Amateur Radio Emergency Service. ï¿½Itï¿½s not really an organization but it is organized on a national basis for community programs.

John Wright, another PCARC member, checks with the Oklahoma Sooner Net and with the Salvation Armyï¿½s network, SATERN.

After the Oklahoma City bombing in 1995 and 9/11, Russell said amateur radio was used extensively. It is also used during and after tornadoes and other natural disasters. Now, the group can work with the Automatic Position Reporting System to help more accurately report severe weather.

The group has an annual field day, which is a combination of a exercise and a contest. ï¿½We go out and set up radios under adverse conditions to simulate disaster response,ï¿½ Suter said. ï¿½In the past, weï¿½ve started with solar power, using a battery in a car or even a portable generator.

ï¿½The last time I kept count, we were able to make contacts in 47 states, the Philippines, some in South America and Puerto Rico in a 24-hour period.ï¿½

Suter pointed out that the word ï¿½amateurï¿½ is not what people interpret it as. ï¿½People interpret it to be an unprofessional group. But while itï¿½s made up of a lot of people for a hobby, itï¿½s not unorganized or unprofessional when dealing with disaster. We have capabilities that public agencies just donï¿½t have,ï¿½ he said.

Members also have to be licensed. The license testing can be done in McAlester now so those wishing to be licensed donï¿½t have to go to Dallas or Oklahoma City as in the past.

Teresa Atkerson writes for the McAlester (Okla.) News-Capital.

Old Technology Still Needed

Sept. 8, 2005

Overwhelming Charity

Joe Carcia, station manager of the American Radio Relay League in Newington, Conn. helps with the disaster relief effort for Hurricane Katrina's victims along the Gulf Coast. (AP)

If anything, Katrina has taught us the value of redundancy. The best way to make sure that messages get through is to have standby systems that can take over when others fail.

(CBS) There is a store in London dedicated to "appropriate technology." It mostly carries products designed to be used in developing countries where there is a weak communications infrastructure.

Sadly, thatï¿½s now the case for a large swath of the United States where Hurricane Katrina and its flood waters have wiped out cell phone towers, telephone switching stations, Internet routers and other ground-based communications systems. Even wireless Internet depends on nearby transmitters and receivers on the ground.

But amateur radio is working and, according to Allen Pitts of the Amateur Radio Relay League (ARRL), "ham" radio operators from throughout the country are answering the call to provide vital communications links. Satellite phones, a much newer technology, are also coming to the rescue.

Pitts acknowledges that cell phones and other technologies "work wonderfully when everything is going right," but "they are very vulnerable when everything is going wrong."

Just as with past hurricanes, earthquakes and on September 11th, the ground-based infrastructure, in many cases failed because vital parts of the system were damaged or overwhelmed during the emergency.

In other words, when you need them most, those cell phones are of no value.

Amateur radio, says Pitts, is not vulnerable to these problems "because each of the radio operators is a complete transmit and reception center unto themselves able to continue going and continue with nothing more than an electrical source, such as a battery or a generator, a radio and piece of wire for an antenna."

Listen to audio of Larry Magid's interview with ARRL's Allen Pitts.

While base-station radios are larger and require an electrical power source, there are also portable ham radios slightly larger than a pack of cigarettes with a range of about 20 miles, according to Pitts. Pitts says that the next sized radio, about the size of a paperback book, can communicate up to about 50 miles without a repeater while larger systems, "about the size of a desktop computer" can communicate globally.

Amateur radio operators are in demand. When I checked the ARRLï¿½s Web site there was a call from the Salvation Army for "10, two-operator Amateur Radio teams for deployment in the U.S. Gulf Coast. Operators must hold at least a General class license. Teams should be fully self sufficient in terms of food, water and lodging and plan to remain in the disaster area for from one to two weeks."

Pitts said there was a "lady in Connecticut," who was listening on her amateur radio and happened to hear that there was a woman "who was trapped for four days without food and water." She was able to relay that message, by ham radio, into an operations center that dispatched the fire department. A day later she got a call from the trapped womanï¿½s mother, thanking her for her role in the rescue.

Ironically, this comes at a time when amateur radio is struggling for respect and, to some extent, survival. What was once a popular hobby has fallen into somewhat hard times for a variety of reasons, including the fact that the Internet, cheap long distance calling, cell phones and other technologies make the ability to use these two-way radios not quite as compelling as it once was.

Also, there is a bit of a rift between some members of the amateur radio community and some parts of the Internet industry over the use of power lines to transmit Internet signals. This technology, which could put power companies into competition with cable and phone companies for broadband service, has been criticized by some ham operators because of possible interference problems.

Despite the fact that their origins go back to the early 20th century, hams are hardly low-tech. There are now bridges between ham operators and other technologies including the Internet, cellular phone systems and Internet phones. In fact, long before the Internet became popular, ham operators were using their radio gear to transmit data along with voice and morse code.

Also coming to the rescue are satellite phones. These phones - which are much more expensive to buy and use than cell phones - rely on satellites rather than ground equipment to communicate with the phone network.

Because satellites are in space, theyï¿½re not vulnerable to conditions here on earth. Also, as long as you have a view of the sky, youï¿½re able to communicate. Iridium, which operates "66 low-earth orbiting (LEO), cross-linked satellites and 11 in-orbit spares," says it provides "complete coverage of the earth (including oceans, airways and Polar Regions)."

I carried an Iridium phone with me when I traveled to Peru a few years ago. It worked great when I was in the clear such as on a boat in the middle of the Amazon River but, because it requires a line of site view of the sky, it had problems in dense jungle and in cities with tall buildings.

Iridium spokesperson Liz DeCastro estimates that there are currently about 10,000 of Iridium's phones being used in the region with orders for about 6,000 more. The company sells through resellers so it doesnï¿½t have exact numbers. DeCastro says that "traffic in the region increased by 3,000 percent" since the storm hit and that the number of subscribers increased by 500 percent.

Satellite phones are a lot cheaper to use then when I went to Peru, but they still cost between $1 and $1.25 per minute to use, according to DeCastro. Thatï¿½s a lot more than domestic cell use, though often cheaper than using U.S. phones when roaming overseas. The phones themselves cost between $1,000 and $1,500 she says.

In addition to handling voice calls, satellite phones can also be used for messaging or data, albeit at modem rather than broadband speed.

If anything, Katrina has taught us the value of redundancy. The best way to make sure that messages get through is to have standby systems that can take over when others fail.

Thatï¿½s why some news organizations keep manual typewriters around. You never know when that old technology may suddenly become the "appropriate technology."

Amateur radio operators head to Gulf Coast

September 6, 2005, 1:00 AM EDT

NEWINGTON, Conn. -- Oscar Fuller only became an amateur radio operator about a year ago, but he knows how valuable his equipment can be in an emergency.

So even though he has never responded to a crisis, the American Relay Radio League member is planning to head to the hurricane-ravaged Gulf Coast and see if he can help establish an emergency communication network.

"This is a tragic set of circumstances," said Fuller, who recently retired from IBM. "If I can lend a hand, I want to."

Fuller and about 14 other members of the Newington-based amateur radio operator network have signed up to join the relief efforts for Hurricane Katrina. The amateur operators _ known as hams _ can often use their equipment to communicate in difficult circumstances.

Because the radio equipment operates on many frequencies, is self-contained and portable, it can often work when other communication networks, such as telephones, aren't working. It can never be blocked, which is why operators say it is good in disasters.

"When all else fails, ham radios work," said Betsy Doane of Shelton, who oversees the 2,500 members of the league in Connecticut.

David Patton, an official with the radio group, said as many as 750 volunteers may be needed. The Connecticut volunteers are going to help provide communication support for more than 200 American Red Cross Shelters in Mississippi, Alabama and the Florida panhandle.

"There are limited resources to an overwhelming disaster," said Allen Pitts, public relations manager for the radio league. "So there is not a ham on every corner. The hams are put where they are needed most of all, in emergency traffic or for saving lives."

Dennis Motschenbacher of Colchester was among the first volunteers to say he would go. He spent Sunday shopping for supplies and getting ready for the 18-hour, 1,100 mile drive to Montgomery, Ala., where he will be dispatched to a shelter.

"Everything I need, I'm bringing," he said. "There won't be any Radio Shack to go to."

The 57-year-old has been a ham for more than 40 years. He has operated his radio from places as far as East Timor and the Balkans.

The hardest part will be "seeing people in this troubled state _ smelly, sick, depressed, angry. And no matter what any of us do, it won't be enough for all of them."

Ham Radio Operators Pitch In To Hurricane Katrina Relief Effort General Interest
09/07/2005
With communications out all over New Orleans and the Gulf Coast, the professionals are turning to amateurs to be their ears to what's going on in the areas devastated by Hurricane Katrina.

Local operators say they've been in touch with people in and around New Orleans since the beginning of the ordeal.

Ed McLaughlin, of Kennewick, says in the days that followed the disaster, he was able to help a family in Medford, Ore., get an update on how their relatives were. He's provided similar contact for a family in Chicago.

The reason-- ham radio, which is able to get in places that have no other means for communication when land-based infrastructure fails.

Ham radio has been such a success during these recent days that FEMA and the Red Cross are now using it as their primary mode for communication until other modes of communication are restored.

Ham radio helps close communication gap

Nixa man relayed message from president to New Orleans' mayor.

Joe Hargis works on his amateur radio in his home in Nixa. Hargis helped rescue an elderly woman by notifying someone who could contact rescue workers via radio.

If you've been unsuccessfully trying to get information about someone living in Hurricane Katrina's region of havoc, here's an avenue you may not have considered: local ham radio operators.

While cell phones rely on towers and traditional telephones rely on intact land lines, ham radios transmit from radio to radio, bouncing waves off the ionosphere in the upper atmosphere far above the Earth's tantrums. They can run off batteries, generators and sometimes even the sun.

Two Ozarks amateur ham radio groups - the Nixa Amateur Radio Club and the Christian County ARES (Amateur Radio Emergency Services) - have been relaying messages from people all over the world to those whose communication has been cut off by Katrina.

David Beckler, a ham radio operator from Nixa, even relayed a message Tuesday from the director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency in Texas to New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin.

"He had a message from President Bush to the mayor of the city of New Orleans," says Beckler, a New Orleans native who moved to Nixa six years ago.

Since the message was an emergency communication, the dispatch needed to go through the net control station on an emergency frequency, Beckler said. He knew it was important, because the ham operator had said, "break, break, break," which requires all other communications to yield and give that one priority.

"The net control station or other stations on this frequency could not hear this message," Beckler says. Beckler contacted the net control station, and people there asked him to contact the sending ham operator and relay the message back to that operator. "That's when he told me it was from President Bush."

Joe Hargis, another Nixa ham club member, also helped with an urgent message. "I was monitoring the SATERN network (Salvation Army Team Emergency Radio Network)," said Hargis, a retired elementary schoolteacher.

"A person called in with a piece of emergency traffic and the (receiving) person could not hear him. He said, 'Is there anyone on the frequency who can copy this?' I broke in and told him I could hear it fine."

Hargis relayed the message back to SATERN, and the operator there could hear Hargis well. "It was a 90-year-old woman and her elderly neighbors. They were afraid to leave their home because of the unrest in the neighborhood, things that were going on, and they needed assistance to be evacuated. They were running low on medicine, and one was running out of her oxygen supply."

Nixa ham club member Rod Kittleman says their members helped save the lives of a couple in New Orleans.

"A weak, disabled elderly couple were trapped in their attic. Their phone worked, but they couldn't get through to local authorities," the KADI radio program manager explains.

Too weak to break through their roof so emergency personnel could find them, the couple called their daughter in this area. She contacted the Nixa club, which relayed the message to a local ham operator who is licensed to operate on emergency frequencies.

"He got through to authorities in New Orleans over the radio, and they were rescued. (The ham operator) relayed the message back to their daughter. That's the reward we live for."

ARRL's Role In Rescue Offers Lessons For Future

Investigations into the communications breakdowns in our national emergency response systems continue. Yet I'm struck by the contrast between the hue and cry for upgraded infrastructure solutions and the much quieter revelation that old-school ham radio provided the only trustworthy communication during Hurricane Katrina.

New Orleans emergency departments' radios were wiped out when broadcast towers lost backup power generators. Police and fire departments only had citizen-band radios, offering inadequate bandwidth. Emergency responders lacked coordinated frequencies.

The National Guard cited antiquated communications technology-as a contributor to its delayed response. Lt. Gen. Steven Blum told USA Today that there was a shortage of high-tech radios and satellite communications gear. "We were underequipped," Blum told USA Today. "We don't need tanks and attack helicopters... but we must have state-of-the-art radios and communications."

The Guard has historically gotten "handmedown" equipment from active-duty military. It now uses "Vietnam-era radios while it needs 37,000 newer radios," according to Guard budget briefings.

Meanwhile, ham radio operators proved that older technology can be the most reliable technology. Our EDA Editor (and ham) David Maliniak wrote an online column on the subject, pointing out that sometimes "old works when new doesn't." (Read it and add your comments at ED Online 11136.) During and after Katrina, hams running on generators (sometimes with makeshift antennas) worked throughout the hurricane zone to put emergency stations on the air. They guided rescuers to stranded victims and updated weather services via the Hurricane Watch Net.

Amateur radio was the primary means of contact with the outside world for many shelters. It's estimated that some 1000 amateur radio volunteers helped serve the hurricane-ravaged communities and shelters, even providing communications for the Red Cross.

Still, the real lesson of the ham radio successes isn't that old sometimes trumps new. Upgraded, reliable hardware is vital for adequate emergency response. Amateur radio has continued to upgrade too. Hams use satellites, digital systems, cross-band repeaters, and more. As the American Radio Relay League (ARRL) puts it, the Morse code key may still be on the desk, but generally it's next to a modern system operable under extreme emergency conditions.

DISTRIBUTED NETWORKS

Katrina taught two key lessons. First, the Amateur Radio Emergency Service (ARES) organization proved effective because hams don't depend on a centralized infrastructure. When cell towers, phone switching centers, or other central communicationsnetworks are down, hams aren't. Many operators have their own generators and are ready to fire them up to get on the air when there's no power. National disaster response plans must assume that the centralized communications infrastructure likely will be crippled, so the emergency system must include a distributed or "mesh" networking scheme.

Second, ARRL succeeded because operators subscribe to a mission that comes with their licenses-to be ready to provide emergency communications whenever and wherever they're needed. ARES has a well-conceived action plan coordinated through the Radio Amateur Civil Emergency Service (RACES). ARES is part of the ARRL, and RACES is coordinated through the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA). But like the broacast system, the emergency plan is decentralized. Radio operators can work independently to serve their community as circumstances require.

A decentralized emergency plan requires deputized people who truly understand and care about their responsibilities. The best emergency response relies on distributed manpower, with first responders empowered to make decisions at the scene of the crisis.

It doesn't take a federal investigation to realize that the government's emergency-response debacle was caused by centralizing the decision-making with politically appointed bureaucrats who didn't have a personal mission or a true sense of ownership in ensuring preparedness. The fiasco with now-deposed FEMA leader Michael Brown exemplifies the folly of appointments based on cronyism, rather than the recruitment of people who have a passion, understanding, and commitment for the responsibilities they shoulder.

In this issue's cover story, Ron Schneiderman looks at government programs and the new technologies tackling our homeland security problems. But will the right people get those technologies? Too often, homeland security appointments and dollars are doled out according to political favoritism. As we saw in the recent emergency response, technologies are only effective when managed by people-like the hams-who take their responsibilities to heart.

Hats off to all of you who care about the quality of the security and emergency communications technologies you're engineering. Let's hope they end up controlled by people who care just as much.

A few months ago, NBC's Tonight Show staged a race between a pair of ham-radio operators with Morse-code keys and a couple of kids with text-messaging cellphones to see who could communicate faster. The hams won hands down, proving, in the minds of some, that old technology could hold its own against new. In recent days, ham radio was put to the test again by Hurricane Katrina. This time, however, lives were at stake.

In the world of design engineers and electronics in general, change is essential. Designers work diligently to make the fruits of their labors obsolete almost before they see daylight. The turnover in technology is sometimes like a flood, with old being washed away by new over and over. Often, the new beats the heck out of the old. But there are times when old isn't necessarily bad; in fact, sometimes old works when new doesn't. And then we're glad that old is still around, or at least we should be.

Wireless technology, while relatively new to many consumers, is of course not new at all. A few (very) old-timers remember the original "wireless" of radio. The revolution wrought by the pioneers of wireless changed the world then, and the technology behind that revolution has been re-invented and re-applied time and again. Its pre-eminent incarnation today is our near-ubiquitous wireless communications infrastructure, which has freed us from the shackles of landlines and made our mobile lifestyles possible. Technology truly is great stuff.

Until, of course, a monster hurricane comes along to render it nearly useless. Here we see a scenario in which a flood literally swept away the new. As Hurricane Katrina's fury hammered the Gulf states on August 29, the communications infrastructure took a devastating hit. Telephone service, including wireless, became at first intermittent and then unusable in many localities. Where there was phone service, 911 switchboards were often unreachable due to the massive volume of calls. The response of local authorities, now termed "confused" by deposed FEMA chief Michael Brown, wasn't helping much. The Gulf Coast was about to descend into darkness, chaos, and, worst of all for many, silence.

But proponents of the old were at the ready. The "old," in this case, is ham radio. In the eyes of the "man on the street," ham radio has a pretty stodgy reputation. Aren't hams still using Morse code? Don't some of them use radios with tubes, for goodness sake? What the "man in the street" probably doesn't know is that it was amateurs who advanced the radio arts early in the 20th century. Down through the decades, amateurs have embraced (and often driven) all of the innovations in wireless technology, up to and including all digital modes and the Internet. But many have stayed in touch with their roots, which is good old-fashioned analog HF operation. And while amateurs have a longstanding tradition as innovators and experimenters, they also have a mandate that comes with their licenses: to be ready, willing, and able to provide emergency communications whenever and wherever they're needed.

As Katrina bore down on the Gulf region, amateur radio operators, under the aegis of the American Radio Relay League's (ARRL's) Amateur Radio Emergency Service (ARES), prepared to swing into action with emergency networks that would run health-and-welfare traffic into and out of the disaster zone. As early as the Monday following the storm, hams throughout the hurricane zone were putting emergency stations on the air. In one instance, hams were instrumental in the rescue of 15 people clinging for life to a New Orleans rooftop. Meanwhile, in Alabama, amateur SKYWARN weather nets kept the National Weather Service apprised of conditions throughout the state. In hard-hit sections of Mississippi, hams running off generators and with makeshift antennas were the only means of communication, getting word to out-of-state friends and relatives concerning their loved ones.

There were numerous other instances of hams helping those who were not simply inconvenienced by the storm, but whose lives were in imminent danger. Now that things have calmed down in the Gulf region, many of the emergency nets have stood down. But hams continue to serve the public in the many areas that are still without power or phone service.

As our nation collects itself in the aftermath of the Katrina disaster, President Bush has promised federal reviews of what went right and what went wrong. One of the findings of those inquiries should be that the federally-instituted Amateur Radio Service, which functions under the licensing authority of the FCC, stood tall when the country needed it.

Amateur radio currently faces various threats to its existence. Chief among those is the advent of broadband-over-powerline (BPL) technology, which, if broadly adopted, has the potential to cause widespread interference to HF communications, not just for amateurs but for other services that use the HF spectrum.

Amateurs and the ARRL have made a lot of noise about BPL, asserting that it could seriously hamper their efforts and those of relief agencies such as the Red Cross and Salvation Army, in the event of a disaster such as Katrina. It's rumored, though, that the same FCC commissioners who have given their blessing to BPL field trials will now take a much harder look at the technical issues concerning BPL and its interference potential in the HF spectrum. Let's face it: The federal government didn't handle the emergency in the Gulf very well; it'd be prudent for it not to sanction a technology that could impede one of the few things that actually worked.

Many readers of this newsletter are amateur radio enthusiasts. If you are, and if you haven't already done so, consider writing your congressman to express your concern about the future of the Amateur Radio Service, especially in light of its outstanding efforts in recent days. Remind your elected representatives that a vibrant and unimpeded Amateur service can and will be a lifesaver when disaster strikes. Also, consider how you yourself might help. What if a hurricane, tornado, or earthquake ravages your area? Are you prepared to get on the air without relying on the mains to handle emergency traffic? Get in touch with your local amateur-radio club and find out how you can pitch in.

Your cell phones and wireless routers are indeed great stuff, but so is a good old HF transceiver. We shouldn't always be in such a hurry to let the flood of new technology wash away the old. The geek down the block with all the antennas on his property could turn out to be your best friend someday. Because sometimes, old trumps new.

Lol... I know America has vast areas compared to the UK but don't you think Police could have been equipped with CB radios in NO? I remember hearing the police bands were knocked out but I don't know whether they could talk radio to radio (Like CB) or if they needed to talk via a base. Obviously police couldn't have been issued with Amateur Gear (because they would be illegal operators) but CB stuff they used to use years ago would have assisted them greatly in that respect. Most of the squeaking you refer to would be gone due to base stations being off and cars being flooded. It would have to have been an organised person who remained on the air unaffected. Most of the CB fraternity would have heeded the evacuation call and got out or.. as so many Amateurs like to think of us, robbing the shops and being all lawless like. It must, in reality, have been a very scary hellhole for a lot of people and I certainly hope I never go through it.
I think all in all, joking aside, CB could have had (if it didn't anyway) a great part to play alongside Amateur radio in the relief and Police co-ordination efforts.

Regards,
Graham

The governor was only confirming what many of us in this hobby realize:

Ham radio operators have not served any useful purpose in emergency communications for a long time. The professionals pretty much ignore them. At most they talk to one-another in health and welfare nets and if someone actually calls in with an emergency all hell breaks loose because everyone wants to talk personally with the ham calling in.

Hams have this vision of themselves as the emergency communicators who while huddled in a dark storm beaten shack will get through to the outside world and save the day by using a car battery and some jury-rigged cw setup. And the hams on the outside see themselves as the unique link on the other end who will alert the authorities and direct them to the site before anyone else can because they alone have a connection with the emergency site. It's little more than mental masturbation folks 'cause the real world doesn't work that way.

Hello Jerry,
Sorry to say, you have been taken in again by Rec.Radio.CB

OH? Would you have said that to Marlon Brando? General Curtis LeMay? Patty Loveless? Joe Walsh (guitarist for The Eagles & and. yes, I've talked to him!) How about Andy Devine? Walter Cronkite? Jerry Shatz (kid who played the spoiled rich kid on the Our Gang comedies and later sustained severe injuries during a kamakaze attack on the USS Sigsbee off Okinawa during WWII, Bill Leonard, former President of CBS News, George Pataki, Gov. of New York, Chet Atkins (SK), Larry Junstrom, Bass guitarist for rock group 38 Special, Al Kahn, founder of "Electro-Voice", Bill Reynolds, son of the founder of RJ Reynolds Tabacco Co, Lance Bass, INSYNC pop singer, Emory Gordy, husband of Patty Loveless and country music producer, Paul Tibbets, BrigGen, and pilot of Enola Gay of atomic bomb fame, Howard Hughes (aviator, KNOWN womanizer, and eccentric inventor), Stu Cook, Bass player for Credence Clearwater Revival, Dick Rutan, pilot and adventurer, John Huston, film director, Tex Beneke, lead tenor sax player for Glenn Miller and band leader, and a whole host of innovators, leaders in both civilian and military life. Hardly "wierd, queer or MF people" as your jealous and lowball statement fails miserably to suggest. Hams tend to be pretty successful and multi-talented people. They also tend to have MANY hobbies, and many times, if you find a ham you will find that they are pilots up to commercial and jet-rated, multi-engine, woodworkers, play a musical instrument, read extensively, are highly intelligent, hold high paying jobs, and may own one or more antique cars. They will also have additional interests such as railroads, and collecting various items. This is indicated in the list above and flatly debunks your lowball assertions about Amateur Radio where there is a cross section of the famous and not so famous who, I am sure, would knock your block off if you said such to their faces and some, I am certain, would be quite capable of doing so. Joe Walsh (The Eagles)is a pretty big fella, and I wouldn't want to say such a thing to him! Judging by your statements and your apparent affinity for CB radio, your envy is obvious.

Ever price one of those cable boxes? They probably don't cost much to build, but if you go to buy them, they're on the order of $300-$400, at least the addressable ones. The cheapies, that do no decoding still run into the $100+ range for one that doesn't break in a month or two.

So far as I can see, this is not an electric lamp, but a trim ornament, a

It's not even a light, it's just an ornament, and the swastikas aren't the Nazi version. The article calls the ornament a "babushka", and from what I can see of it in the picture it looks like the design of a traditional Russian matryoshka doll. I don't think Russians would've put swastikas on it on purpose. I have no idea whether any Russian ethnic groups used swastika-like symbols.

It's people like that with their jumping to conclusions and with their delusions that cause all the crap and the lawyers and media just eat it up. What a bunch of aholes. You watch! It'll be against the law to make any little swirl that might resemble a swastika in our schools or sell anything that remotely looks like a swastika and this hyper attention to a non issue will create another red flag for racism and hate. The swastika is an ancient cruciform that had been used extensively before it was perverted by the Nazis.

Because if you did "RF transmission in amateur bands" without the proper license, you could be breaking the law, Len. That would be a very bad thing.

I get along with all sorts of people, Len. Including many who disagree

they

The standards are a lot newer than "70 years old", Len.

As to why anyone would fuss with Morse Code in 2005, the reasons are the same as why anyone would fuss with:

- cars that have manual transmissions instead of automatics
- sailboats instead of power boats
- Drawing and painting instead of photography
- Performing music instead of playing recordings
- Bicycles, running and walking for transport instead of motor vehicles
- Stairs instead of elevators
- Homemade food instead of packaged

And many more.

No - are you? Because you sure take issue about Fessenden's accomplishments
even though they are before you were born.

Yet you talk about 1951 and amateur radio, even though you had nothing to do with amateur radio then.

Because you were a transmitter technician, not a radio operator.

It's odd that you take pride in what you did not do...

Not me.

It sure does seem that you talk about things that happened long before you were born, but get mad when others talk about things that happened long before they were born. As if it's OK for you to do but not others.

Nope. It's a separate subset. Electronics does not include things like antennas. Radio does.

What parts of electronics are not covered by electrical engineering, Len?

No, it isn't.

Physics is a science. Electrical engineering is a form of engineering, and electronics is a subset of that.

Do try to keep up, Len. Your mistakes (like the ones Hans pointed out about DD-214s) are embarrassing.

Incorrect. There were comments to the FCC by people who had not passed the Morse Code test which said it was a good thing and should be retained. The English Teacher is one of them, but not the only one.

If you actually read all of the comments, you'd know that.

When you make a sweeping general statement, and someone proves an exception, the statement is shown to be false. That's basic logic.

So your sweeping general statement:

"It is a "good thing" only to those that took that test and passed it" has been proven to be untrue and invalid.

FCC hasn't revoked their licenses. Nor has FCC required widespread retesting of amateurs. FCC considers those folks you disdain to be qualified to operate amateur radio stations. FCC does not consider you to be qualified to operate an amateur radio station, though.

No, correct. The license is for operating, not for building.

Don't have to look them up, I know them.

No, just not of primary importance. A means to an end, not the end in itself.

Which ones? The technical regulations for amateur radio are very few, very basic, and offer radio amateurs a lot of variety and freedom.

That's true - it's "International". Or perhaps "Internationale"?

Len, you're and NCI BELIEVER. You're so biased that you cannot conduct enough to see what really happens.

At least twice, NCI has gotten involved in proposed FCC rules changes that have nothing to do with Morse Code testing. Of course they have every right to comment on such changes, but doing so disproves the claim that NCI exists for ONE purpose.

Where?

Show us the exact quote where he said you should have obtained an amateur radio license before accepting professional radio employment!

C'mon, show us the quote. Or maybe you can't, because it doesn't exist.

IOW, yes, you're afraid.

But obviously not what goes on in the amateur radio bands.

So you're old. Big deal. You want a merit badge?

Obviously not.

That Morse Code is alive and well in the amateur bands. As much as that may bother you, it's true.

One of my main interests in amateur radio. I have several. You don't seem to have any.

Actually, I enjoy the competition, the operating, testing my skill and equipment against others and my previous efforts. Awards, trophies and certificates aren't why I contest.

Considering your near-complete ignorance of Morse Code and amateur radio, it's a good thing you didn't talk about those subjects.

That's good, considering that you're hardly a good role model.

Can't take the competition, huh?

This past weekend I hosted Thanksgiving for 12 people – friends and family. I cooked a 21 pound turkey with homemade stuffing, made homemade bread, did it up right. Others did the vegetables and desserts.

Can you cook, Len?

All that noise is Len's diversion from the fact that Fessenden was transmitting understandable voice by radio in 1900, and by November 1906 had reliable two-way
transatlantic voice communication working.

When Len doesn't like facts, he goes for the messenger.

Actually, at least two:

NCI opposed "weak signal" subbands on the 50, 144 and 432 MHz bands.
The proposal was intended to create subbands where Morse Code, SSB, PSK31
and other relatively-narrow-bandwidth signals would be free of QRM from FM and other wider-bandwidth signals. Had absolutely nothing to do with Morse Code testing,
yet NCI opposed it.

NCI also supported an ARRL proposal that would have given automatic free upgrades to a significant number of amateurs by waiving the written tests for those upgrades. Again, had absolutely nothing to do with Morse Code testing, yet NCI supported it.

There currently are 14 active beacons in the NCDXF/IARU system all on 14.1MHz, and most have companion beacons on 18.11, 21.15, 24.93. and 28.2MHz. The 15th station (VR2B) is rumored down due to a lightning strike.

IIRC you can find their schedule at the NCDXF web site.

Fancy this:

I have found DoD records both a Steven J. Robeson (USMC, E-7) and a Steven (no MI) Robeson (USCG, E-3).

There has been no evidence provided by -anyone- that proves K4YZ is -either- of those two servicemen.

Absence of evidence is not proof. IOW, the fact that K4YZ refuses to provide evidence of his military service is -not- proof that he served.

The meager information that K4YZ -has- provided, wittingly or not, about his claimed military service has either been contradictory or completely wrong; and the number of those discrepancies continues to grow almost every time he posts.

K4YZ has demonstrated that he is more than willing to provide proof to defend and support his arguments when he is able to do so.

K4YZ refuses to provide definitive proof of his claimed military service, opting instead to argue the issue for seven years, mostly by making retaliatory attacks, in literally thousands of posts that must have taken hundreds if not thousands of hours to write, and to the detriment of any credibility he may have had in this or any other Usenet group.

More succinctly, this is a circumstantial argument that leans HEAVILY to the conclusion that K4YZ is lying about his claimed military service. In fact, the argument is so strong that it casts doubt on the sanity, motives, and/or credibility of anyone who defends him. Yet that's what you do. And your only explanation is to say, "I've seen nothing which indicates that Steve is a fake." Well, Dave, I think you -can- seen what everyone else can see. The only question is why you deny it. Care to answer that one? Or would you rather I find the answer myself?

You seem to be under the misconception that I'd assume that all of your recent childish posts to Steve were directed at me.

Well now, Mark, since you asked, I don't think that your sexuality matters much in amateur radio. If you weren't a ham, you'd still be a sexual pervert. Your revealing post to another newsgroup advertising your desire for a deviant sexual encounter would still exist. You'd be the same sick individual you were before it was brought to my attention. This particular problem you have--having folks in an amateur radio newsgroup know what kind of sick-o you are--was brought about by Mark Morgan. Now that anyone who reads this newsgroup knows about it, you'll likely have to deal with it.

You seem to revel in your new notoriety. Why else would you keep bringing it up over and over and over during the course of a single day and keeping drawing attention to it?

I've provided you with an answer, Mark. I've never been afraid to answer the question which you put to Steve. You outed yourself through stupidity or carelessness. Now that you've done so, there's no putting that particular genie back in the bottle.

By your numerous posts, it appears that you are more than anxious to continue drawing attention to your bisexuality. I guess it pays to advertise.

I surely can, Frank. I see that same nothing that you see. I've seen

There is no "mission". The group does not exist, except in the fertile imagination of Danny "QRP is for Sissies" K7SS who first published this humor in NCJ several years ago.

Honor and pride among non-existant fictional characters in non-existant.

They didn't disappear. They never even existed.

The organization does not exist.

"involved in the amateur community" means what? Most of us are hobbiests, loosely connected by common interests like contesting, DXing, experimenting, repeater support clubs, public service interests, etc., etc. I derive great enjoyment from my experimenting and contesting, and I have a half a wall of "recognition" for various public service activities, but I don't consider myself part of any "community" of amateur radio.

Are you suggesting that technical curiousity and experimentation is no longer needed? That everything has already been invented, so no new knowledge in electronics/radio communications is needed?

I disagree. There is a small and very valuable cadre of dedicated hams in ARES, RACES, DMCS, AERO, SATERN, and similar public service/disaster recovery groups. By and large they are above average in their technical qualifications, and they take their roll very seriously.

Then there is a larger group of "fair weather volunteers" who are eager to grab their handheld and rush to provide public service communications for the marathon or the walkathon, but only so long as their 2 batteries hold up. They impress each other by the number of T-shirts they've gotten from the local chamber of commerce for these outings.

BiG? That would be quite a trick around here. Everyone has to use Propane because there is no underground distribution system.

I saw a recent news story where BPL was shut down in one city because of technical problems were costing more than they could expect to recover and that the system was being dismantled.

5 Newsgroups?

and my set top box was free when I signed up. I get excellent picture and sound and no interferrence between the ham stations (One in the shop and one in the house). 1.8 through 440. Legal limit 1.8 through 30. 100 watts out on 50 MHz and 200 watts on 144 MHz.
I'm running an Alpha 76A in the house for HF and a Henry 2K-4 in the shop.

Remember Digital is not necessiarlily HDTV, but they will be moving up out of the VHF bands.

BTW, the computers and ham rigs are less than 3' apart and the network cable runs with the coax cables for a ways.

I can run a 2-meter HT on the desk with the computers running although
if I get within about a foot of this one it will open the squelch.
Still I can set the HT next to the left side of the monitor and it works fine.

Tain't nearly that bad. It depends on what bits are missing, but what happens it the picture will start to break up if enough of the right bits are missing.

You do need a good UHF antenna for local HDTV at present and probably will for Digital as well. Rabbit ears definitely will not cut it. and if you live near woods it's likely a small antenna on a roof mounted tripod won't either. I get a reasonably good signal for 60 to 90 miles and do copy one station quite well from nearly 100 miles (Traverse City), but their digital antenna is out this direction so I'm not sure just how far it is to the antenna.

Yup. Free.
Both my cable box and my digital satellite box were free with a years subscription. Actually the same went for the cable modem at 3 Mbs with free installation which meant running almost 200 feet of cable .
It's a 130 feet from the pole so that's 160 feet and there are 3 drops in the house so I guess it's a tad more than 200 feet along with 3 splitters which are cheap.

I'll probably keep right on using the one old 37" analog set down in the basement until it gives out. The tuner gave out long ago, but I use it as a monitor with the VCR as the tuner.

The problem is that Google invested $100,000,000 in BPL. With that kind of money it will suceed even if it fails. The only way to prevent it is to boycot Google and sites with "ads by Google" and let them and their advertisers know it.

You should have boycotted Google while you could, now Google supported BPL is in action. Time is running out on worldwide radio communication.

(asking about ways to attract newcomers to contesting):

Well, Hans, I'm not a newcomer, and I don't qualify for QCAO either. But here are some ideas from what I remember as a newcomer:

1) More entry classes for the "little guy". This has already been done on FD, and to a limited extent in SS. The problem is that the new-to-contests ham with a midlevel 100 W transceiver, paper logs and G5RV is in the same category as the big gun with multiple big beams, an IC-7800 and every automated doodad conceivable.

2) Put the results back in QST - all the results. First time my call was in QST was for SS scores. Why shouldn't the newcomers get the same thrill? Website is NOT the same thing.

3) Perhaps the check could be changed from "year of birth" to "number of times you've operated this contest", with a bonus for new folks. Oldtimers couldn't adopt a low number because it would be easily detected. This also helps the folks who may have held a license for years but who are new to certain aspects of amateur radio.

4) More contests (!) but also more variety. The QRP folks do this with their sprints, and there used to be 4 CD parties a year. For example:

- A "mini-SS" in late summer that lasts only 6-12 hours and you can work the same station on different bands
- Low-power (150 w max) contests
- Contest exchanges that include something that changes with each QSO. For example, you might have a list of 10-12 items like op's birthday, name, grid square (on HF!)rig/key/mike/antenna/exact power in use, zip code, old callsign, etc. One item from the list would be exchanged with each QSO, and the item would change after each QSO. When the list ran out you'd start it again. For a real challenge, require a couple of items in each exchange.

- Single-band and couple-of-band contests to concentrate the action.

For the record. Morse code is not a boy scout requirement at all and in my several years as a Boy Scout Leader (my son went all the way to Eagle) I never met another scout leader or scout who knew morse code.

Even in the boy scout Radio merit badge requirements, morse code is an "ellective" requirement which any scout may pick to do out of a list of several Radio merit badge requirements.

There was a time when "some" USA police forces had CB Ch 9 monitoring capability. I recall seeing highway signs stating that to be the case, but its been a long time since I remember seeing such signage. I doubt many of those still do today.

It depends on the radio system being used. If it is a repeater based system, odds are that rules out direct car to car capability.

I don't recall even reading about any incident where CB was used at all. That doesn't mean it didn't happen somewhere, but it certaily appears that any CB activity was minimal at best in comparison to the role that amateur radio played.

Nope.

It was answered a long time ago, Markie.

The "fist day (you) showed up" I just thought you were a

That was determined to be a fact.

SINCE then you've been proven to be a dishonest sexual predator,

What's weird is folks walking around today with brand labels, college labels, beer labels, music groups, etc on their shirts.
Why would anyone one want to be IDed with the Old Navy brand, KISS, or Coors Beer ??

I struck up a conversation with a chap that had Ohio State University on his sweat shirt -- turns out he never attended OSU - some one gave it to him !!

At least my shirt with my Ham callsign is ME.

Meet a lot of Hams that way too!

bpl companes will fail. slow transmision rates

how can they compete with broadband over cell ?

More war stories for the Legion hall, Hans (or is it the VFW post?)????

But nice catch anyhow --- I'm sure it'll take Lenniepoo several days to spin his outright outlandish assertion about "only one DD214 per customer" into a VFW Lodge dissertation on ADA message traffic 50-odd years ago.

Tsk, Davie missed the discussion on Anderson PowerPole connectors

<shrug> Morse code MUST shine forever and ever just as it did in 1912. Radio amateurs have always been first responders in each and every emergency/disaster with their miraculous CW rigs that managed to survive when the entire infrastructure of commercial/professional communications failed.

Ergo, cellphones are no huckin good for anything. :-)

Tsk, you are doing your Don Rickles impersonation again. Did you get a DVD of "CPO Sharkey" and study his acting again?

I looked for, and obtained, BuPers 1900.8B (effective 10 May 05).
It is 102 pages long and describes what to do and where to put it in a RELEASE FROM ACTIVE DUTY form DD-214. Just fire up your search (and destroy?) computer and get your own.

I didn't "research" anything a few days ago, super chief. Since my single DD-214 was obtained 49 years ago, I'd never done a lot of "research" on it...although several government agencies have since used that - and several more - documents to "research" me.
They did their own "research."

A DD-214 form is from the Department of Defense. That is used by ALL the United States military. Knowing that you go semperfiddling for the NAVY more than anything, I looked for and got the NAVY regulation regarding that form and what everything is supposed to be on it and explanations of all the acronyms, abbreviations, and special terms. PRODIGIOUS! Far-out! Super detail and almost microscopic delineation of so many different reasons to GET OUT OF ACTIVE DUTY! Wow!

Okay, to "research:" Getting out the mental fine-tooth comb, I see where my general statement is partly wrong NOW! I ALSO see where my general statement is partly RIGHT now! Am I going to argue those things? No. It isn't worth it in regards to CIVIL radio regulations. Doesn't apply one bit to CIVIL matters, except for certain select civil service jobs...or running for political office.

I don't give a fork how many DD-214 forms you have. I don't give a fork if you had a CORRECTION TO DD-214 (that's what a DD-215 is used for) multiple times. I don't give a fork if you served ON the DD214 (USS Borie, sunk in 1943). I don't give a fork if you had your forms signed by the Chief of Naval Operations or Dubya hisself.

The point is - for THIS venue - that Dudly the Imposter has NEVER made a single part of his alleged DD-214 visible to any of us. Frank Gilliland has made available a PART of his DD-214 visible to anyone who accessed the link he provided. I can send a digitized image of my single DD-214 or even hand-carry a copy to some stupor-patriot demanding proof. That includes my Honorable Discharge certificate issued in 1960. Fork them stupor-patriots.

Now, if you want to support an obvious liar, forger, identity-thief and general all-around snow-job dumbsnit like Dudly, go for it. Dudly DOES have an Amateur Extra license and he DID pass a 20 WPM code test. Whoopee. BIG credit to United States amateur radio! Role-model! A poster boy in a flight suit of the CIVIL Air Patrol!

Jimmie Noserve doesn't have any DD-214. He will never have one. He can never get one.

I got my single DD-214 49 years ago after serving three continuous years in an HF radio communications station of the U.S. Army. Did nothing but HF, VHF, UHF, microwave radio operation and maintenance as well as being a soldier whose primary mission was "to close with and destroy the enemy." Not one single DD-215 filed on that. Didn't need one to be. My Honorable Discharge from the United States Army was effective in April, 1960.

Now, I've not been a "researcher" on the U.S. Navy Bureau of Personnel since 1960, one of those hell-bent on proper crossing of Ts and dotting of the right i (or the left i). My "research" has been in regard to electronics and doing my CIVILIAN job...which wound up having more to do with military electronics than any of the four years I spent on active duty during my single voluntary enlistment, an enlistment that began DURING a hot shooting war.

As far as United States government agency regulations on CIVILIAN radio, especially in regards to a HOBBY radio activity such as amateur radio, I can't see why in the hell you get so wrought up about USN/USMC regulations? None of that applies to CIVIL radio, does it?

No, I have to take that back. You are a manager in civilian life and you take amateur radio very, very seriously. You support and defend all amateur extras, especially those who can do morse code. In your outlook on this hobby activity, you get militant and demand discipline and dedication to this hobby "service." All must pass in review properly or be subject to some sort of verbal "captain's mast." You want to be in command. Of the USS Caine?

Temper fry.

All extra morsemen seem to need to stick together. Perhaps by some bizarre emotional crazy glue...an attachment stuck on by once having passed a federal high-rate telegraphy test required in a hobby radio activity.

Heil is arguing because he has a need to argue and to put others

I disagree, Mark. I do not consider a RADIOTELEGRAPHY TEST to be any "operating skill" worthy of being part of an amateur radio operator's license.

The FCC has had that viewpoint. They said so in public documents.

Stupor-patriot morsemen think morse code telegraphy skills are all that is "operating skill."

Wrong on two accounts. First of all, I already got a Commercial Radiotelephone license 49 years ago so the FCC "qualified" me (legally) to do so. Secondly, I've never tested for any amateur radio license so the FCC cannot say I am either "qualified" or "unqualified." Third, by law, to operate ON THE FREQUENCIES allocated only to radio amateurs requires an amateur radio license, neither "qualification" or "unqualification" but just a condition of the regulations.

Judging by all the time you spend in here...I'd say you have NO

You are already in the Dudly the Imposter category, saying so

Tsk, more mirror gazing on your part, Jimmy.

All I'm doing - in between replying to some of the PCTA heckling - is trying to get rid of the code test.

You've already taken that test, will never have to test for it again unless you miss the last renewal date and expire that license.

YOU are telling ALL NEWCOMERS to test for morse code. You've been doing that for years. Why are you so hostile to newcomers?

behavior exemplified by the PCTA.

Sorry. No credit. Not even partial credit. When you go to some length to assert that multiple DD214's are "forgery" or "most rare", you get no partial credit from BUPERS (by the way, it's BUPERSINST 1900.8B, not BuPers 1900.8B) when their official instructions say exactly the opposite.

Good luck on this one now.

My situation exactly. While I'm at 2500' ASL and my local stations are at 8800' and 4500', there are higher peaks between them and me. So signal levels are down and reflections off local peaks (that are line-of-sight to me and the transmitters) are as strong as those via the obstructed path.

This is a technological disaster, which of course is what you get when you put politicians in charge of science projects.

DTV, BPL, the morning after pill, all screwed up by politicians with agendas.

you talk about FCC "chuckling" over some comments.

IIRC you had to file on 98-143 by mail.....you couldn't get ECFS to work for you back then.....

FCC received over 6000 comments on the "incentive licensing" proposals, Len. Without the internet. That's a fact.

And only 13 years after 1951.

The fact is that even back then, with no internet and no ECFS, there were over 6000 comments received by FCC on a proposal to change the amateur radio license rules. Kinda deflates your rant about ECFS and such, doesn't it?

You weren't a ham then and you're not one now. Morse Code is one form of excellence in radio, btw - then and now.

Nothing. You didn't work for FCC, didn't have anything to do with FCC rules for the Amateur Radio Service.

back then, nor with FCC's regulation of amateur radio...

Well, you were wrong, Len. Because Morse Code is still alive and well in radio today.

Morse Code wasn't "dying" back then and it isn't "dying" now - in amateur radio, anyway.

How many techniques did you pursue back then which are long gone - dead - now? Does anybody use 100 wpm teletypewriters anymore? Do broadcast stations have FCC licensed engineers on duty while they're on the air anymore? Etc.

Your value system is very clear, Len - if something in radio took some of your time or effort but didn't pay back in dollars, you avoided it.

Not true at all. Each DD214 covers one period of service and contains information (training courses completed, medals and decorations, ranks held, etc.) which is not repeated on subsequent DD214s. All 4 of mine are "effective", and there's nothing "rare" about that. Len got it wrong, and you've got it wrong. Maybe Len will loan you his copy of BUPERSINST 1900.8B. Well, there you have it -- proof that Major Dud -would- have several DD-214's if his claims were true. Yet Dud didn't know what "years and months in specialty" meant, nor did he know that after 1979 (and possibly for some time -before- 1979) there is no box to indicate character of service (i.e, "Honorable").

Thank you, Hans.

You liberal clowns seem to believe that repeating this outright lie will make it true, or that honest people will allow you to repeat it with impunity until the naive and weak of mind accept it.

You have been consistently and repeatedly unable to show a single lie told by Bush about WMD. That you would continue to say he lied about WMD makes you the worst kind of liar.

Let's look at some facts

1. Steve Robberson stated that I was gay

FACT: Not true, if anything I'm the opposite, any women who knows me will tell you that I'm a womenizer and truth be known, I really don't hide that fact

2. Steve Robberson claimed he recieved threaten letters from me, thus having me removed from the Internet.

FACT: Mr Robberson has never shown me these letter that he claimed to have recieved from me, in fact the only ones I know of where the ones that were posted on here and weren't from me at all but someone using blogger.com email system, and faking my email address. (and them assholes at consolidated.com believed that son of bitch)

3. Steve Robberson claims that my father has AIDS

FACT: my father doesn't have AIDS and is in fact somewhat perfect heath, Steve doesn't know my father and he has never meet him and thus Mr. Robbersons claims are false if not slanderous.

Did I leave anything out????

Don't thank me so fast.

The current DD214 contains that information in Block 24. (Character of Service).

All 4 of mine also contain similar information but in different block numbers (apparently the form changes over time). In 1961, 1964, and 1973 it was in Block 13a, and in 1979 it was in block 9e. In all cases the block is titled "Character of Service".

The choices are:

1) HONORABLE
2) GENERAL (UNDER HONORABLE CONDITIONS)
3) UNDER OTHER THAN HONORABLE CONDITIONS
4) BAD CONDUCT
5) DISHONORABLE
6) UNCHARACTERIZED (Void or Entry Level Separation)

well then...

would those in the USA like to explain why I heard at least one W4 blasting out over 14100 during last weekends contest ?

It was my understanding that anyone with intelligence was requested to steer clear of 14100 in the hope of everyones benefit to observe which way the propogation is going (including packet radio operators) with the blatant and largely bull-in-china-shop behaviour of some cw operators last weekend, i'm surprised that even 14100 was blasted to bits let alone any other frequency where those with less than 10watts werent given a chance to get a word in.

I posted a quiz a while back re: avoiding 14.100 MHz Few knew the answer -- one sed why not -- it is in the CW portion.

I have noted during a CW contest - contesters frequently think the frequency is clear and jump on it.

In a nut shell -- many newbies and OT's as well -- don't have a clue as to what the NCDXF/IARU Beacon system is.

FYI: See URL:

I can hardly speak for myself, so I can't speculate. Depends on the vintage of the DD214. On a current Navy one Block 11 would indicate the NECs held during the enlistment ("NEC" is what you jarheads call an "MOS"). On my older editions there is are other types of information in Block 11 (last duty station, location if afloat unit, etc.).

Mark, there's something curious about morsemen. They are very SERIOUS about their hobby and INTENSE on certain skills. Their sense of humor is limited only to THEM "laughing" at those who disagree on telegraphy testing.

BTW, there's 3,796 filings now, one was added on the 28th. :-)

The specific date periods on comments applies to the Commission's activities on decision-making for a final Memorandum Report and Order. That date period is determined by statements made in the publishing of a docket/proceedure in the Federal Register. Standard practice at the FCC.

In the case of publishing NPRM 05-143, the Commission was 6 calendar weeks LATE. NPRM 05-143 was opened to the public on 19 July 2005. Publishing in the Federal Register didn't happen until 31 August 2005. The date period for comments was not specifically stated in NPRM 05-143, was specifically stated in the Federal Register on 31 August 2005.

The normal delay on public release to publishing is anywhere from zero days to a week. A few have taken longer, but it would be a VERY long search to find a docket/proceeding that was delayed SIX WEEKS. In those SIX WEEKS DELAY the public filed 52% of all comments filed.

The "public" may not be fully aware of the official comment period beginning date. The Commission is fairly speedy on getting proceedings published in the Federal Register. The "public" does not consist of just attorneys and beaurocrats handling law, so they would generally be unaware of that delay. Such a long time was unexpected.

>why does it seem you don't care about the rul of of law when it suits

Jimmy Noserve only cares about the preservation of morse code, everything from "operating skill" to the license test. He can't bear to give up any of that.

Mark, Jimmy has NOT proven his "fact." The only way to determine that "fact" is to visit the FCC Reading Room in DC and view all the filings. Those old dockets and proceedings aren't on-line.

As to "disaster," that is subjective opinion. In the long run,
"incentive licensing" only served to harden the class distinction among licensees. It got too cumbersome for the future to the Commission, so they streamlined it via FCC 99-412.

The League lobbied for, and got "incentive licensing." Old-timers of the League loved radiotelegraphy, following the "tradition" established by its first president, St. Hiram. Old-timers wanted to prove Their radiotelegraphy skill was the "highest" attribute of amateurism. They got it, complete with rank-status-privilege. Especially the privileges. They were better than anyone...in their minds.

Sister Nun of the Above got into the act, spanking ruler at the Sister apparently has never used the word "jibe," thought I was "jiving her." :-)

Up to mid-2000, the highest-rate telegraphy skill was NECESSARY to achieve the "highest" class license.

True enough.

But, look out, I can see Sister approaching with her ruler!
She is going to criticize use of the word "bane!" :-)

Jimmy is getting desperate on "having to do with" stuff. :-)

The FCC has had commentary periods for nearly all the major issues affecting U.S. radio amateurs since its creation in 1934. [exceptions are federal orders to cease transmission on Presidential orders and the "housekeeping" changes to Parts of Title 47 which regarded legal clarification of some regulations corrections]

The Constitution of the United States gives all its citizens the Right to address their government...on anything. The comment period of dockets and proceedings at the FCC is one way to do that on specific radio regulatory issues.

Jimmy seems very territorial. He regards federal amateur radio regulations as "private turf" which can ONLY be discussed by licensed radio operators to their government. That is wrong.
The FCC must listen to ALL...including English teachers who haven't the foggiest notion of what "radio" is, let alone amateur radio (she had to research the subject through WikiPedia). :-)

Both Bill Sohl and Carl Stevenson have appeared in-person before the FCC in regards to the code-test/no-code-test issue. That's about as close as ANY in here have been to the regulation-decision-makers without actually working there (as Phil Kane did).

The Staff and Commissioners at the FCC decide what is to be changed and how to change radio regulations...DEPENDING on input from the "public." [a "researching" of Parts 0 and 1 of Title 47 C.F.R. will explain that, also the Communicaitons Act of 1934, a Law passed by Congress]

Citizens Band Radio Service had "permits?" :-) Strange, my forms said they were LICENSES. No tests at all required.

Were any "turned down?" I don't really know. I've heard of those but never met anyone who was "turned down."

I opt NOT to bother with CB radio since it is not to my needs in communicating anything by radio. The little two-way radio terminal called a "cell phone" serves both me and my wife very adequately in mobile communications needs.

My old Johnson Viking Messenger CB radio still works, is still operating within FCC regulations. It is a relatively easy task to connect it up to an antenna (mag-mount) in the car, plug it into the car's 12 VDC system, and operate. If the vibrator high-voltage supply will continue working, it is as reliable as any old tube radio. [vibrator supplies were NEVER considered reliable, but they were terribly cheap in consumer grade tube equipments] Living within a mile of I-5 passing through has shown that a few channels for CB are way too few for the hundreds of thousands of CB users...years ago.

>Cbers seem by and large politeir than hams with folks they disagree >with they can be a bit vulgar for my taste on the air, but there are 40 >channels to choose from Irrelevant to Jimmy's remarks. All Jimmy wants to do is show contempt for CB. Since he was living in 1958 when that service (on the 27 MHz band) was created, he feels contemptuous of all who have not taken a federal test to "qualify" for radio transmission below 30 MHz. :-)

[I think he was born an amateur...:-) ]

CB communications are "Too vulgar?" I've heard much, much greater vulgarity in the military service (which Jimmy was never a part of nor will he ever be). I've heard greater vulgarity on shop floors from union members. I've heard greater vulgarity in the black sections of Los Angeles. I need to brush up on my Spanish to find out if the language there in the barrios is "too vulgar." :-)

>> Like I said - you had nothing to do with amateur radio policy

Jimmy, who never worked IN the FCC (and will never do so), thinks that just having an amateur license means he had "something to do with amateur radio regulations." :-)

Jimmy is just being "vulgar." :-)

Tsk, tsk, Jimmy's working receiver can't pick up anything but the "low end" of the HF amateur bands...and he thinks that radiotelegraphy is still a big mode in radio? Incredible!

>> > Why bother pursuing a dying technique back then?
>

You have to give Jimmy some slack, Mark. Since his receiver can't pick up anything outside the "low end" of HF ham bands, he thinks HF is still "alive with the sounds of morse code"
(as if Julie Andrews were singing it on top of a hill).

>> How many techniques did you pursue back then which are >> long gone - dead - now? Does anybody use 100 wpm teletypewriters >> anymore? Do broadcast stations have FCC licensed engineers >> on duty while they're on the air anymore? Etc.

Actually, those electromechanical teletypewriters with 100 WPM throughput are still in use in a few places...but they are waaayyyyyy down in numbers. Teletype Corporation went defunct some years ago...they couldn't produce a product inexpensive enough to handle written communications needs. Even TDDs have dropped electromechanical teletypewriters in favor of smaller, easier to use solid-state terminals.

The requirements for licensed COMMERCIAL radio operators at radio broadcasting stations is down but I haven't checked to see if broadcasting regulations changed to allow ALL. An amateur radio license was NEVER a "qualification" to operate anything but an amateur radio on amateur frequencies.

Vacuum tube design and use in designs is almost kaput. The solid-state devices made most of them obsolete. Tubes remain only as very high-power transmitter final amplifiers, as wideband (one octave plus) amplifiers in microwaves, as magnetrons in microwave ovens, as assorted klystrons in microwave radios. CRTs are going bye-bye, replaced by solid-state displays in TV sets (to press a pissy point, "liquid-state" in LCD screens). A very few optical detection devices use multi-stage photomultipliers. NODs (Night Observation Devices) still depend on a special photodetector and photon multiplier tube set. Oh, and high-power radars still use pulsed maggies for those transmitters. Tubes are now used only as REPLACEMENTS...except by those who can't hack engineering of solid-state circuits...or long for days of yore, when they were born (or before).

>> took some of your time or effort but didn't pay back in dollars, >> you avoided it.
>
>if your statement is accurate (not comenting on that yea or nea) so >what you value nothing without involing Morse Code

Poor Jimmy is verging on a breakdown. He is picking up on the old socialist or communist sloganeering against evil, filthy capitalists who have obtained money the old fashioned way... they EARNED it! Jimmy sounds like he doesn't have much money.

Tsk, tsk. I entered electronics and radio in the vacuum tube era and learned how to design circuits using tubes. Had to put aside everything but the basics of those circuits in order to work with transistors, then ICs. Took lots of learning AND relearning to do all that and I did it on my own time. It was worth it in the knowledge acquired, the experience gained in making successful designs, eminently satisfactory to me. Lots and lots of new things were learned out of sheer interest in learning more about NEW areas, things that were NOT of personal monetary gain.

Jimmy can't shift out of his League-conditioned thinking about morsemanship being the ultimate skill in radio. He doesn't understand how it is to BEGIN in HF communications WITHOUT any morse code mode needs. He must really resent others who've entered the bigger world of radio communications without being required in any way to be morsemen.

>you can use money to feed yourself can't do that with morse

One can waste a LOT of time looking for radiotelegraphy jobs!
Those are quite scarce! If Jimmy wasn't so old, he could join the Army and be an "army of one" analyzing foreign morse code radio intercepts (but I'll bet he would hate the Ft. Huachuca M.I. school in the summertime).

I doubt there is one job opening in the entire USA that requires any manual telegraphy (morse code) skills for wired communications now. If he joined SAG or SEG he might get a part in some western movie or TV show as an actor playing the part of a telegrapher.

Well, Jimmy could go to sea if he got a Radiotelegraph (Commercial) license. Problem is, he'd have to use SSB voice, one of the TORs (Teletypewriter Over Radio), and VHF FM voice for most ship masters. Jimmy wouldn't like that. He couldn't pop into the galley and cook big turkeys at his whim.

Confusion say: Man with one-track mind often get train of thought derailed.

I understand your posting, Mark. I was, once again, trying to make my position clear in this din of inequity.

Jimmie Noserve and Kernal Klunk love to argue for argument's sake. They seem to be addicted to WIN arguments at all costs!
They frequently take quotes out of context and make disparaging remarks on those as if they were stand-alone statements.

They MUST win. They are very sore losers, can't take pain.

They both use "operating skills" as if the ONLY kind of operation of radio involves morse code. In every other radio service, there is NO "operating skill" of the amateur variety involved. Klunk should know that but he is no longer in the furrin servuss, busy using his "operating skills" out of exotic countries such as Guinea-Bisseau. He probably misses BEING "rare DX."

>> The FCC has had that viewpoint. They said so in public documents.

As early as 1990, as in FCC 90-53. Anyone can see a copy of that at the NCI website. They said the same thing, although in slightly different works, in NPRM 05-143 released on 15 July 2005.

>> Stupor-patriot morsemen think morse code telegraphy skills are
>> all that is "operating skill."

That's how it is with them extra morsemen.

Failure to agree with them results in immediate dismissal under BUPERINST something or other.

In point to point communications, it doesn't matter. But in the real world of emergency comms, voice is the usual mode, not CW.
IE: the fone hurricane nets, health and welfare nets, etc... Few are CW. But anyone can copy them if they were. Well... If you know code that is... I knew code well before I was a licensed ham.

>*But when the powers out so are the repeaters and also the mobile phones. CB >radio is more practicable in situations like this as anyone can use them not >just Amateurs.

Yea, but is there anyone on the CB bands I would want to talk to to pass the traffic, etc? I kinda doubt it. CB might be ok for very local neighborhood type stuff. Lets them keep in contact. But as far as actual traffic, or health and welfare, CB would be nearly useless to me.
Not knocking CB, just telling it like it is. I would be on HF, and VHF simplex. Also...The likelyhood of all the repeaters staying down for long is probably fairly slim, unless the actual antenna towers are down.
They can always bring a generator...You can also set up portable repeaters. IE: ad nausium... I'll be talking everywhere. Local and regional. CB wont. They will mostly be stuck in the hoods.

>How are they doing this? in what way? Who are they talking to?

Do they keep you locked in a closet? We do it in whatever way it takes to get the job done. We are like Marines. We adapt, overcome.
Who do we talk to? Nearly anyone who is involved. From the national weather service, to the coast guard, to local government officials, to hospitals, etc, etc.
You talk about the CBer's. Where were the CB'ers in NO when the people were stuck in attics with cell phones? The cell phones were working for many people. They would call for help on their phones, but there was no way to relay this to local police, etc...
Where were the CBers? They didn't seem to be capable of relaying the calls. How were these calls being relayed to local NO officials?
I'll tell ya...The people that the cell phone users would call, would eventually be routed to ham radios ops doing health and welfare traffic to/from the area. Most of this was on HF. 40 meters in the day, 75 meters at night. The 7.290 traffic net handled quite a bit.

Anyway, the traffic net people would get calls from relatives relaying the cell phone calls from the attic stuck people. You would have people in Houston, Dallas, Little Rock, etc, etc, etc, etc relaying these messages back to NO to be relayed to the police, fire, etc.
I heard many of these attic stuck relays on HF. So sorry, but your CB would be useful to the local is not really flushing. The CBers either were flooded themselves, or fell down on the job.
The hams using HF were the only ones reliably relaying these messages. And they were often 100's on miles away from NO.
I'm in Houston. So we also had our scare this year too. Believe me, I'm prepared to handle just about anything, and have been, well before any hurricanes hit the area. I have battery power here at home, and don't need no stinkin power. Ditto for mobile, portable. I'm fully self contained, power, radios, antennas. I can run off battery power indefinately. I recharge off the trucks. I have portable towers, masts, etc, etc, so I can set up at any remote location with 1st class antennas. We practice this at field day every June...

I can set up antennas portable, better than some peoples home antennas. IE: large yagi's, etc. I could act as the portable tower for a temporary repeater. Anywhere they want to put it. I drag it all on a motorcycle trailer.

>*I will be ready on my good old trusty CB to broadcast to the masses. More >accessible and cheaply available than Ham but im sure the both can work in >tandem.

There is a place for CB, no doubt. But I see CB as being good for the local neighborhood talk line where poeple can keep track of the people around them. It's pretty good for that. But handling actual emergency traffic? In most cases CB would be fairly useless.
For many reasons. IE: the frequency is wrong for that use.
IE: only 5 watts legally... IE: the wrong people are on it, if you are relaying traffic. Trust me. I have all of the currently used devices. Cell phones, CB's, ham radios, shouting with my lungs, etc. if I knew a hurricane was heading this way, I'd keep my ham radios over all of them any day of the week. Way more useful, with the wide spectrum coverage, antennas, radios, etc
I have. Here in Houston, ya wanna relay emergency traffic, get on ham radio. Ya wanna talk to a truck driver looking for grocers supply, get on a CB.. And I'm not bad mouthing CB.
Just stating the bleeding obvious. To me, CB is nearly useless.
In contrast, I can do nearly anything with the ham radios.
Including digi modes, fax, SSTV, etc...I can send documents, weather charts, etc, over ham radio. And I can do it all with one radio. My IC-706mk2g. Covers all bands, all modes. gen cov receive. Heck, it'll even do CB if you clip a dyode.... My is still locked though..Can you do all that with your CB? I doubt it unless it's ham rig... :(
Good luck in the next emergency... I bet more will line up behind me, than you, if they need to pass welfare traffic about people stuck in flooded attics. We proved ourselves at that job. We got many of them plucked out over those few days after the storm. I heard many of them myself live, in living color.

Many on 7.290 and the linked health and welfare nets.

Well...you're still referring in terms of the fictional group of people you posted about. There is still the reality that "crappy" radio amateurs are generally ignored or otherwise discouraged from on-the-air participation, etc. So, after some time, they'll usually "disappear." That's why CW/or no CW requirement (if CW was ever used as a filtering mechanism as some claimed), the filtering mechanism is other radio amateurs.

I would define amateur community as the whole population of all amateurs. You may not consider yourself a part of the whole, but you are (to me).

Absolutely not! I would think you know me better than that. You are either completely ignoring or completely missed the open paren/close paren part of my response. What is intended in that is that, some-not-all, grumpy old amateurs choose to spread the word that "all that stuff" is still as necessary as ever for radio operation. Which, IMNSHO, is untrue. One can walk into any store and pick up a radio and have it working inside of a few minutes these days. And, hallelujah for that. The "stuff" of amateur radio is still very, very important for a lot of reasons; not the least of which would be the heritage quotient, experimentation as you've so aptly pointed out, and for the real nitty-gritty science of the art of amateur radio. I DO, however, choose to recognize that there are those amateurs who just plain aren't interested in that aspect. And, I don't call them any less an amateur.

MMmm, I would choose to disagree with your belief, and it would be interesting to find out which of us is closer to the truth on the matter. Oh wait! You said "small." OK, I'll go along with that. BUT, wouldn't you also give that others involved in public service take their role very seriously as well? I mean, really. I know some folks who've spent thousands on being prepared and being able to fully serve; and I know the "small" group you refer to. Do we place more value on the amount of money one has spent on preparedness or how "above average" they are in technical qualifications? I think that each in their own right are just as valuable--given that the propensity to volunteer is equitable.

The "vintage" is mine, form 1 JUL 79, which I scanned and posted earlier. Box 11 of that edition indicates both the MOS and "years and months in specialty". My own DD-214 indicates that my MOS was
"2841-GRNDRADREPMAN" (Ground RADIO Repairman), and denotes "03 years 06 months" for years and months in specialty. But right after Major Dud saw my DD-214 he stated that "He was in an expensive technical MOS (Ground Radar Repair). You've got to go out of your way to get the USMC to send you home as a PFC with 3 1/2 years of service...".

Now if you look at the form you will see just to the right of box 11 is box 12, "Record of Service". Part c of that box indicates "Net Active Service This Period", part d being "Total Prior Active Service", part e is "Total Prior Inactive Service", etc.

So how do you suppose a reasonably intelligent person (smart enough to be an avionics tech), who claims to have received several of these forms (after previously claiming to have received only one), manage to confuse "years and months in specialty" with total time in service? Do you suppose he lost all those DD-214's -- despite the line at top dead center which reads,

THIS IS AN IMPORTANT RECORD
SAFEGUARD IT

?????

As usual, ham radio operators help sustain wide-ranging relief efforts
By Andrea Kelly
ARIZONA DAILY STAR

When all else fails, it's ham radio to the rescue. Across Arizona, ham radio operators are helping sustain Hurricane Katrina relief efforts by helping storm-torn communities communicate with rescue workers and family across the country.

This is not a first. Ham radio operators come out of the woodwork during disasters around the world, even transmitting in Morse code if language barriers pop up, said Mike Swiader, president of the amateur Superstition Radio Club in Mesa.

Ham radio operators have contributed to emergency communication efforts since World War II, Swiader said, and were crucial in post-9/11 emergency communications, as well as during the Asian tsunami last holiday season.

Ham radios work when other communication systems are down because they're powered by solar energy, batteries or generators rather than the usual power sources.

The messages are passed from radio to radio until they get to the one they are directed to, so radios don't need to be near each other to receive signals, like regular AM/FM radio signals.

"We've been involved in passing traffic to and from the Louisiana and Mississippi area," said Tom Fagan, a leader of the Arizona ham radio operators organization. "Whatever needs to come in and go out, we're doing."

When Arizona's ham operators - there are about 16,000 of them - get messages from the hurricane area, they send them along to agencies like the American Red Cross and the Salvation Army in the Southeastern region of the country.

"We're the link," Fagan said.

Because communications within a disaster area are often jumbled, Swiader said, it's frequently easier for someone there to contact an operator in someplace like Arizona, who can then relay the message back to a recipient in the disaster area.

"Sometimes it's easier to be heard that way," he said.

More than 30 ham radio operators from Arizona have already headed toward the disaster area, hoping to assist relief efforts and give emergency workers a way to communicate with each other, as well as assisting searches for missing persons.

"They're moving in when they're allowed by American Red Cross and Salvation Army," said Ned Stearns, a Phoenix ham operator and vice director of the American Radio Relay League, the national organization for ham operators.

In fact, the ham operators plan to compile a list of people they can determine as missing, deceased, alive or unknown, based on information transmitted over the ham signals.

To find out about people in the area, visit www.satern.org and fill out the health and welfare information request for the person you are trying to find. This information will be sent through the Salvation Army emergency radio network.

Ham radio operators are helping from afar
Sunday, September 11, 2005
By DONNA FORK
For the Times dfork@knology.net

But sometimes, even the airwaves can be shut down

They also serve who listen and wait.

Huntsville amateur radio operator Douglas Hilton and other "hams" in North Alabama are helping victims of Hurricane Katrina by relaying messages between families, officials and each other.

Lately, Hilton's been spending most of his spare time in his "ham shack" listening to calls for assistance. The systems analyst for Intergraph Corp. is one of thousands of amateur radio operators who help people during emergencies.

Hilton is unusual in the ham radio world because he wears three hats: He is an amateur operator; a member of the Alabama State Defense Force, heading the Communications Platoon for North Alabama; and he's also a military communicator authorized to use the Military Affiliate Radio System.

His connection to the military (although he is a civilian) gives him access to additional radio frequencies most amateurs can't access. He has been a ham radio operator for 42 years; his father had him build a crystal radio when he was 7 years old, and he got his ham license as a teenager. But he wasn't all that active until after the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001.

"That hit me right between the eyes," he recalled, and he began to get back into "hamming."

Now Hilton averages about 100 hours a month on the airwaves and takes countless courses and certifications. He noted that amateur radio operators are "amateurs only in that we're not paid." In return for service "the government gives us frequencies."

Hilton said the North Alabama ham community is large.

"The astronauts are all ham radio operators," he said, noting that astronaut Owen Garriott "was the first ham in space."

Hilton''s "ham shack" is not really a shack at all. It is located in a formal dining room - complete with crystal chandelier. It includes six radios and two computers.

"You don't need six, but don't tell my wife, please," Hilton said as his wife, Diane, laughed. She recently obtained her "technician class" license, which is the entry-level license for ham radio operators. The next is "general class." The highest, which Hilton has, is "amateur extra." Anyone can be an amateur radio operator, Hilton said. There is no age limit: Hilton knows a local ham who is 18 and another who is 89.

It doesn't cost much to be an operator either, he said. A beginner could purchase enough equipment to get started for about $300. Courses are free through one of the local ham radio clubs, of which there are several, including the Huntsville Amateur Radio Club (the Web address is www.harc.net).

In addition to six radios, Hilton has two computers: a laptop and a desktop. "The radios are hooked into the computer." With his setup, the Hiltons can talk to other hams as far away as Japan.

But for the past two weeks there hasn't been time to chat about matters such as which antennas they like the best. There are emergency frequencies to monitor. At the moment, a critical one is the Salvation Army's emergency frequency, Hilton said.

Hilton never knows if it will be a busy night or a quiet one. Recent solar flares have added to the uncertainty because they disrupt communications. Friday, during the late afternoon and early evening, it was unusually quiet.

"I'm a little surprised," he said Friday. "I can't believe how dead these bands are."

Solar flare

It could be a solar flare, or could be something else. "That's the problem, you never know," he said. The waiting, the listening, "it wears you out." But it's worth it when you hear a voice and "you might be the only person who can hear this guy."

On Thursday night, when Hilton was expecting problems, reception was fine. He was able to contact two operators in Louisiana. He also heard one Mississippi ham talking to another ham "so at least one is working there."

ecause of the Hurricane Katrina disaster, there are thousands of messages piling up, waiting to be delivered by ham radio operators: What will happen when all their radios start working again?

People like Hilton will be extremely busy. There are thousands of ham radio operators in Louisiana and Mississippi. When they all get back to the airwaves, it will be quite a challenge to sort out all the messages.

But meanwhile, as they waited for the deluge of messages, on Thursday night the Huntsvillians received a call for help from New Mexico.

Maura Campbell Kingston of Clovis, N.M., was trying to reach her aunt, 76-year-old Sister Joan Campbell, a nun, of Harvey, La. Kingston called the Salvation Army, which contacted a ham radio operator, who called Hilton.

Hilton tried Thursday to reach a radio operator in Louisiana to check on Campbell, but almost all of them were off the air. Finally on Friday night Hilton got through to "KG5YK," who is Robert A. Turner of Elm Grove, La.

When Turner's message came through, hams from all over the United States could be heard, eager to talk with him.

Helping 'ham brother'

The outpouring of sympathy could not be contained: Radio operators from Texas, Indiana and elsewhere all expressed their support for their "ham brother" in Louisiana.

"I hope this never happens again," said Turner of the Katrina disaster. "It's been a tough time. ... I'm looking for the right words." He thanked the other hams for their all their help.

"You'd do the same for us," the ham from Texas said. Others echoed his sentiments.

Turner gave Hilton information about when to call with his "health and welfare message" about Kingston's aunt. Hilton vowed to keep trying to deliver the message "for as long as it takes."

But that proved to be unnecessary.

Friday night, after calling her aunt repeatedly, Kingston finally reached her by phone. She was still at her home in Harvey.

"She was OK," Kingston said in a telephone interview Saturday. "Harvey stayed dry." But the area was without power and Campbell "was sitting in the dark with her flashlight."

Later, Kingston called Hilton to thank him. She said he told her: "I'm just doing it because I want to help."

Kingston was impressed.

"I believe that thing about Southern hospitality."

Ham radio proves to be more than a hobby
By Jeannetta Edwards

Daily Times Leader

When Hurricane Katrina hit, telephone and cell phone communication hit an impasse because of downed lines and towers. But, amateur radio operators did not miss a beat or a transmission.

"Before and after the hurricane, this has proven to be the most reliable form of communication," said Randall O'Brien, a retired highway patrolman who has been involved with ham radio operation for 35 years.

"People thought when they got cell phones, they didn't need us anymore," said O'Brien, an advanced licensed operator, who often talks to missionaries in South and Central America.

According to Denver Baker, Clay County has more than 30 amateur radio operators, but only a small fraction are active.

"It's a wonderful hobby," said Baker, whose wife recently received her technician license.

The multi-faceted operation includes digital and satellite communication and is enjoyed by all age levels.

"This is a good hobby for seniors or for young people," said Baker.

By becoming a ham radio operator, which requires taking a test to obtain a license, people can communicate with others anywhere in the world.

"The classes for the test are free," said Baker, "and we help you with everything you need to know."

According to Baker, who has been enjoying this hobby for the last 10 years, the only investment required is the fee for the test and the purchase of equipment. A handheld transmitter cost around $100.

The self-policing group ensures that everyone adheres to the rules and regulations.

"We're called amateur radio operators, but there's nothing amateur about it," said O'Brien, who first became interested in electronic at age 13.

The group, which also belongs to the American Radio Relay League, meets monthly in West Point.

"We have a good bunch of hams in this area," said Baker. "We bring food at our meetings and have a good time."

"It's nice, especially for seniors," said Baker.

For information on getting involved in ham radio operation, call O'Brien at 494-2898 or Baker at 494-9096.

Ham Radio Operators Offer Help

By Beth Hahn
Mountain View Telegraph
Since Hurricane Katrina hit New Orleans last week, several ears in the East Mountains and Estancia Valley have been tuned to amateur short-wave radios.
McIntosh resident Ed Brooks said local Ham radio operators are willing to relay messages from the Gulf Coast if needed.
"We guys here in the Estancia Valley are just listening," he said. "We haven't had any need for what we can offer."
Although they may not be needed yet, Brooks said local Ham radio operators are still listening in to conversations taking place in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama.
During the interview with Brooks, his Ham radio was tuned to a conversation involving a Coast Guard helicopter that was rescuing a family from a rooftop in New Orleans with direction from another Ham radio operator.
Brooks said similar situations have been broadcast hundreds of times during the past week.
"It's been really spotty, but what we've been (hearing) is that it was good fortune that somebody down there had Ham equipment," he said.
Daryl Clutter, an Edgewood Ham operator and member of the Salvation Army's shortwave network, said he relayed a message from Ontario to U.S. Coast Guard officials in Washington, D.C., that originated in Louisiana.
"It was just the word 'help' spelled out two times," he said.
Like Brooks, Clutter said he has stayed close to his Ham radio since Aug. 29.
"There's been so much going on," he said. "Every day, something happens."
Clutter, a former truck driver who often delivered frozen food to the Gulf Coast, said radio traffic has slowed since the hurricane devastated the region.

"You just wonder who all you know, that used to be your customers down there, that are still alive or had the good sense to get out," he said.
As amateur radio operators, Clutter said, Ham enthusiasts practice for disasters "every day."
"There's only so many cell phone frequencies," he explained. "If the phone system goes down, there's no way ... (one company) could handle all the 60,000 or 70,000 phone calls."
Mountainair resident and Ham operator Bob Scupp said the Salvation Army network alone has handled more than 128,000 messages since Aug. 29.
Brooks said Ham operators have been relaying messages from residents to volunteers or emergency personnel. Since a large number of National Guard and military personnel have arrived in the area, Brooks said the messages have changed from pleas for help to questions about well-being.
Shelters for evacuees are beginning to utilize Ham radios to communicate with other shelters to help families find missing relatives, Brooks said.
Rescues are still going on.
"There's been instances where they're still finding people, trapped in houses, trapped in buildings or running out of oxygen," said Clutter. "It's just terrible what's going on down there."
Clutter and Brooks said they will not offer assistance unless someone requests contact in the Albuquerque area.
"We don't want to tie up the frequencies," Brooks said.

Amateur radio operators provide vital communications support
By Teresa Atkerson
MCALESTER NEWS-CAPITAL (MCALESTER, Okla.)
MCALESTER, Okla. -

With more than 10,000 requests for help in finding loved ones, the amateur radio operators in Louisiana are extremely busy.

In fact, they are so busy, they have asked people to wait with their requests unless there is an extreme emergency.

Ralph Suter, with the Pittsburg County Amateur Radio Club, said they had about a half dozen requests for assistance in locating loved ones in the area devastated by Hurricane Katrina. &#65533;The Red Cross funneled the requests for health and welfare,&#65533; he explained. Now, the national traffic system is backed up with the requests, he said, because there were so many.

There are extreme problems with communications in New Orleans at the present time. Suter explained VHF radio has to have line of sight while amateur radio operators can use lower frequencies that can bounce off or curve to get the message through. &#65533;A benefit of amateur radio is you can throw a piece of wire in a tree or up a flagpole. With 12 volts of power, you can operate on a local or even worldwide basis,&#65533; he explained.

As an example, Suter said recently an amateur radio operator in Louisiana had some kind of problem that he couldn&#65533;t get help with after the hurricane. He put out the message, it went through Washington state to Texas and then into Louisiana where the right people were found to help him.

Amateur radio operators can also communicate via Morse Code, upload through television or computer or radio to satellite, Suter said. That gives them even more advantages in communication.

Jim Russell, president of the PCARC, said amateur radio has been around as long as there has been radio. Even in World War I, amateur radio operators helped with messages in Morse Code, which is something operators today still must learn as part of their licensing process.

&#65533;We look at it as a hobby,&#65533; Suter said. &#65533;It&#65533;s a resource of individuals because they have an interest to develop the skills to operate radios in various modes.

&#65533;It&#65533;s a resource for trained communicators.&#65533;

There are forms that must be used when transmitting messages. &#65533;When it goes into the system at one point and comes out at the destination, it is exactly the same information, even with the misspelled words,&#65533; Suter said. &#65533;It&#65533;s our responsibility when handling traffic that it comes out exactly as it comes in.&#65533;

Suter said many of the operators use their radios on a daily basis while others check weekly. When it comes to disasters, there is the Amateur Radio Emergency Service. &#65533;It&#65533;s not really an organization but it is organized on a national basis for community programs.

John Wright, another PCARC member, checks with the Oklahoma Sooner Net and with the Salvation Army&#65533;s network, SATERN.

After the Oklahoma City bombing in 1995 and 9/11, Russell said amateur radio was used extensively. It is also used during and after tornadoes and other natural disasters. Now, the group can work with the Automatic Position Reporting System to help more accurately report severe weather.

The group has an annual field day, which is a combination of a exercise and a contest. &#65533;We go out and set up radios under adverse conditions to simulate disaster response,&#65533; Suter said. &#65533;In the past, we&#65533;ve started with solar power, using a battery in a car or even a portable generator.

&#65533;The last time I kept count, we were able to make contacts in 47 states, the Philippines, some in South America and Puerto Rico in a 24-hour period.&#65533;

Suter pointed out that the word "amateur" is not what people interpret it as. "People interpret it to be an unprofessional group. But while it's made up of a lot of people for a hobby, it's not unorganized or unprofessional when dealing with disaster. We have capabilities that public agencies just don't have," he said.

Members also have to be licensed. The license testing can be done in McAlester now so those wishing to be licensed don't have to go to Dallas or Oklahoma City as in the past.

Old Technology Still Needed

Overwhelming Charity

Joe Carcia, station manager of the American Radio Relay League in Newington, Conn. helps with the disaster relief effort for Hurricane Katrina's victims along the Gulf Coast. (AP)

If anything, Katrina has taught us the value of redundancy. The best way to make sure that messages get through is to have standby systems that can take over when others fail.

(CBS) There is a store in London dedicated to "appropriate technology." It mostly carries products designed to be used in developing countries where there is a weak communications infrastructure.

Sadly, that's now the case for a large swath of the United States where Hurricane Katrina and its flood waters have wiped out cell phone towers, telephone switching stations, Internet routers and other ground-based communications systems. Even wireless Internet depends on nearby transmitters and receivers on the ground.

But amateur radio is working and, according to Allen Pitts of the Amateur Radio Relay League (ARRL), "ham" radio operators from throughout the country are answering the call to provide vital communications links. Satellite phones, a much newer technology, are also coming to the rescue.

Pitts acknowledges that cell phones and other technologies "work wonderfully when everything is going right," but "they are very vulnerable when everything is going wrong."

Just as with past hurricanes, earthquakes and on September 11th, the ground-based infrastructure, in many cases failed because vital parts of the system were damaged or overwhelmed during the emergency.

In other words, when you need them most, those cell phones are of no value.

Amateur radio, says Pitts, is not vulnerable to these problems "because each of the radio operators is a complete transmit and reception center unto themselves able to continue going and continue with nothing more than an electrical source, such as a battery or a generator, a radio and piece of wire for an antenna."

Listen to audio of Larry Magid's interview with ARRL's Allen Pitts.

While base-station radios are larger and require an electrical power source, there are also portable ham radios slightly larger than a pack of cigarettes with a range of about 20 miles, according to Pitts. Pitts says that the next sized radio, about the size of a paperback book, can communicate up to about 50 miles without a repeater while larger systems, "about the size of a desktop computer" can communicate globally.

Amateur radio operators are in demand. When I checked the ARRL's Web site there was a call from the Salvation Army for "10, two-operator Amateur Radio teams for deployment in the U.S. Gulf Coast. Operators must hold at least a General class license. Teams should be fully self sufficient in terms of food, water and lodging and plan to remain in the disaster area for from one to two weeks."

Pitts said there was a "lady in Connecticut," who was listening on her amateur radio and happened to hear that there was a woman "who was trapped for four days without food and water." She was able to relay that message, by ham radio, into an operations center that dispatched the fire department. A day later she got a call from the trapped woman's mother, thanking her for her role in the rescue.

Ironically, this comes at a time when amateur radio is struggling for respect and, to some extent, survival. What was once a popular hobby has fallen into somewhat hard times for a variety of reasons, including the fact that the Internet, cheap long distance calling, cell phones and other technologies make the ability to use these two-way radios not quite as compelling as it once was.

Also, there is a bit of a rift between some members of the amateur radio community and some parts of the Internet industry over the use of power lines to transmit Internet signals. This technology, which could put power companies into competition with cable and phone companies for broadband service, has been criticized by some ham operators because of possible interference problems.

Despite the fact that their origins go back to the early 20th century, hams are hardly low-tech. There are now bridges between ham operators and other technologies including the Internet, cellular phone systems and Internet phones. In fact, long before the Internet became popular, ham operators were using their radio gear to transmit data along with voice and morse code.

Also coming to the rescue are satellite phones. These phones - which are much more expensive to buy and use than cell phones - rely on satellites rather than ground equipment to communicate with the phone network.

Because satellites are in space, they're not vulnerable to conditions here on earth. Also, as long as you have a view of the sky, you're able to communicate. Iridium, which operates "66 low-earth orbiting (LEO), cross-linked satellites and 11 in-orbit spares," says it provides "complete coverage of the earth (including oceans, airways and Polar Regions)."

I carried an Iridium phone with me when I traveled to Peru a few years ago. It worked great when I was in the clear such as on a boat in the middle of the Amazon River but, because it requires a line of site view of the sky, it had problems in dense jungle and in cities with tall buildings.

Iridium spokesperson Liz DeCastro estimates that there are currently about 10,000 of Iridium's phones being used in the region with orders for about 6,000 more. The company sells through resellers so it doesn't have exact numbers. DeCastro says that "traffic in the region increased by 3,000 percent" since the storm hit and that the number of subscribers increased by 500 percent.

Satellite phones are a lot cheaper to use then when I went to Peru, but they still cost between $1 and $1.25 per minute to use, according to DeCastro. That's a lot more than domestic cell use, though often cheaper than using U.S. phones when roaming overseas. The phones themselves cost between $1,000 and $1,500 she says.

In addition to handling voice calls, satellite phones can also be used for messaging or data, albeit at modem rather than broadband speed.

If anything, Katrina has taught us the value of redundancy. The best way to make sure that messages get through is to have standby systems that can take over when others fail.

That's why some news organizations keep manual typewriters around. You never know when that old technology may suddenly become the "appropriate technology."

Amateur radio operators head to Gulf Coast

September 6, 2005, 1:00 AM EDT

NEWINGTON, Conn. -- Oscar Fuller only became an amateur radio operator about a year ago, but he knows how valuable his equipment can be in an emergency.

So even though he has never responded to a crisis, the American Relay Radio League member is planning to head to the hurricane-ravaged Gulf Coast and see if he can help establish an emergency communication network.

"This is a tragic set of circumstances," said Fuller, who recently retired from IBM. "If I can lend a hand, I want to."

Fuller and about 14 other members of the Newington-based amateur radio operator network have signed up to join the relief efforts for Hurricane Katrina. The amateur operators _ known as hams _ can often use their equipment to communicate in difficult circumstances.

Because the radio equipment operates on many frequencies, is self-contained and portable, it can often work when other communication networks, such as telephones, aren't working. It can never be blocked, which is why operators say it is good in disasters.

"When all else fails, ham radios work," said Betsy Doane of Shelton, who oversees the 2,500 members of the league in Connecticut.

David Patton, an official with the radio group, said as many as 750 volunteers may be needed. The Connecticut volunteers are going to help provide communication support for more than 200 American Red Cross Shelters in Mississippi, Alabama and the Florida panhandle.

"There are limited resources to an overwhelming disaster," said Allen Pitts, public relations manager for the radio league. "So there is not a ham on every corner. The hams are put where they are needed most of all, in emergency traffic or for saving lives."

Dennis Motschenbacher of Colchester was among the first volunteers to say he would go. He spent Sunday shopping for supplies and getting ready for the 18-hour, 1,100 mile drive to Montgomery, Ala., where he will be dispatched to a shelter.

"Everything I need, I'm bringing," he said. "There won't be any Radio Shack to go to."

The 57-year-old has been a ham for more than 40 years. He has operated his radio from places as far as East Timor and the Balkans.

The hardest part will be "seeing people in this troubled state _ smelly, sick, depressed, angry. And no matter what any of us do, it won't be enough for all of them."

Ham Radio Operators Pitch In To Hurricane Katrina Relief Effort
General Interest
09/07/2005
With communications out all over New Orleans and the Gulf Coast, the professionals are turning to amateurs to be their ears to what's going on in the areas devastated by Hurricane Katrina.

Local operators say they've been in touch with people in and around New Orleans since the beginning of the ordeal.

Ed McLaughlin, of Kennewick, says in the days that followed the disaster, he was able to help a family in Medford, Ore., get an update on how their relatives were. He's provided similar contact for a family in Chicago.

The reason-- ham radio, which is able to get in places that have no other means for communication when land-based infrastructure fails.

Ham radio has been such a success during these recent days that FEMA and the Red Cross are now using it as their primary mode for communication until other modes of communication are restored.

Ham radio helps close communication gap

If you've been unsuccessfully trying to get information about someone living in Hurricane Katrina's region of havoc, here's an avenue you may not have considered: local ham radio operators.

While cell phones rely on towers and traditional telephones rely on intact land lines, ham radios transmit from radio to radio, bouncing waves off the ionosphere in the upper atmosphere far above the Earth's tantrums. They can run off batteries, generators and sometimes even the sun.

Two Ozarks amateur ham radio groups - the Nixa Amateur Radio Club and the Christian County ARES (Amateur Radio Emergency Services) - have been relaying messages from people all over the world to those whose communication has been cut off by Katrina.

David Beckler, a ham radio operator from Nixa, even relayed a message Tuesday from the director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency in Texas to New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin.

"He had a message from President Bush to the mayor of the city of New Orleans," says Beckler, a New Orleans native who moved to Nixa six years ago.

Since the message was an emergency communication, the dispatch needed to go through the net control station on an emergency frequency, Beckler said. He knew it was important, because the ham operator had said, "break, break, break," which requires all other communications to yield and give that one priority.

"The net control station or other stations on this frequency could not hear this message," Beckler says. Beckler contacted the net control station, and people there asked him to contact the sending ham operator and relay the message back to that operator. "That's when he told me it was from President Bush."

Joe Hargis, another Nixa ham club member, also helped with an urgent message. "I was monitoring the SATERN network (Salvation Army Team Emergency Radio Network)," said Hargis, a retired elementary schoolteacher.

"A person called in with a piece of emergency traffic and the (receiving) person could not hear him. He said, 'Is there anyone on the frequency who can copy this?' I broke in and told him I could hear it fine."

Hargis relayed the message back to SATERN, and the operator there could hear Hargis well. "It was a 90-year-old woman and her elderly neighbors. They were afraid to leave their home because of the unrest in the neighborhood, things that were going on, and they needed assistance to be evacuated. They were running low on medicine, and one was running out of her oxygen supply."

Nixa ham club member Rod Kittleman says their members helped save the lives of a couple in New Orleans.

"A weak, disabled elderly couple were trapped in their attic. Their phone worked, but they couldn't get through to local authorities," the KADI radio program manager explains.

Too weak to break through their roof so emergency personnel could find them, the couple called their daughter in this area. She contacted the Nixa club, which relayed the message to a local ham operator who is licensed to operate on emergency frequencies.

"He got through to authorities in New Orleans over the radio, and they were rescued. (The ham operator) relayed the message back to their daughter. That's the reward we live for."

ARRL's Role In Rescue Offers Lessons For Future

Investigations into the communications breakdowns in our national emergency response systems continue. Yet I'm struck by the contrast between the hue and cry for upgraded infrastructure solutions and the much quieter revelation that old-school ham radio provided the only trustworthy communication during Hurricane Katrina.

New Orleans emergency departments' radios were wiped out when broadcast towers lost backup power generators. Police and fire departments only had citizen-band radios, offering inadequate bandwidth. Emergency responders lacked coordinated frequencies.

The National Guard cited antiquated communications technology-as a contributor to its delayed response. Lt. Gen. Steven Blum told USA Today that there was a shortage of high-tech radios and satellite communications gear. "We were underequipped," Blum told USA Today. "We don't need tanks and attack helicopters... but we must have state-of-the-art radios and communications."

The Guard has historically gotten "handmedown" equipment from active-duty military. It now uses "Vietnam-era radios while it needs 37,000 newer radios," according to Guard budget briefings.

Meanwhile, ham radio operators proved that older technology can be the most reliable technology. Our EDA Editor (and ham) David Maliniak wrote an online column on the subject, pointing out that sometimes "old works when new doesn't." (Read it and add your comments at ED Online 11136.) During and after Katrina, hams running on generators (sometimes with makeshift antennas) worked throughout the hurricane zone to put emergency stations on the air. They guided rescuers to stranded victims and updated weather services via the Hurricane Watch Net.

Amateur radio was the primary means of contact with the outside world for many shelters. It's estimated that some 1000 amateur radio volunteers helped serve the hurricane-ravaged communities and shelters, even providing communications for the Red Cross.

Still, the real lesson of the ham radio successes isn't that old sometimes trumps new. Upgraded, reliable hardware is vital for adequate emergency response. Amateur radio has continued to upgrade too. Hams use satellites, digital systems, cross-band repeaters, and more. As the American Radio Relay League (ARRL) puts it, the Morse code key may still be on the desk, but generally it's next to a modern system operable under extreme emergency conditions.

DISTRIBUTED NETWORKS

Katrina taught two key lessons. First, the Amateur Radio Emergency Service (ARES) organization proved effective because hams don't depend on a centralized infrastructure. When cell towers, phone switching centers, or other central communicationsnetworks are down, hams aren't. Many operators have their own generators and are ready to fire them up to get on the air when there's no power. National disaster response plans must assume that the centralized communications infrastructure likely will be crippled, so the emergency system must include a distributed or "mesh" networking scheme.

Second, ARRL succeeded because operators subscribe to a mission that comes with their licenses-to be ready to provide emergency communications whenever and wherever they're needed. ARES has a well-conceived action plan coordinated through the Radio Amateur Civil Emergency Service (RACES). ARES is part of the ARRL, and RACES is coordinated through the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA). But like the broacast system, the emergency plan is decentralized. Radio operators can work independently to serve their community as circumstances require.

A decentralized emergency plan requires deputized people who truly understand and care about their responsibilities. The best emergency response relies on distributed manpower, with first responders empowered to make decisions at the scene of the crisis.

It doesn't take a federal investigation to realize that the government's emergency-response debacle was caused by centralizing the decision-making with politically appointed bureaucrats who didn't have a personal mission or a true sense of ownership in ensuring preparedness. The fiasco with now-deposed FEMA leader Michael Brown exemplifies the folly of appointments based on cronyism, rather than the recruitment of people who have a passion, understanding, and commitment for the responsibilities they shoulder.

In this issue's cover story, Ron Schneiderman looks at government programs and the new technologies tackling our homeland security problems. But will the right people get those technologies? Too often, homeland security appointments and dollars are doled out according to political favoritism. As we saw in the recent emergency response, technologies are only effective when managed by people-like the hams-who take their responsibilities to heart.

Hats off to all of you who care about the quality of the security and emergency communications technologies you're engineering. Let's hope they end up controlled by people who care just as much.

A few months ago, NBC's Tonight Show staged a race between a pair of ham-radio operators with Morse-code keys and a couple of kids with text-messaging cellphones to see who could communicate faster. The hams won hands down, proving, in the minds of some, that old technology could hold its own against new. In recent days, ham radio was put to the test again by Hurricane Katrina. This time, however, lives were at stake.

In the world of design engineers and electronics in general, change is essential. Designers work diligently to make the fruits of their labors obsolete almost before they see daylight. The turnover in technology is sometimes like a flood, with old being washed away by new over and over. Often, the new beats the heck out of the old. But there are times when old isn't necessarily bad; in fact, sometimes old works when new doesn't. And then we're glad that old is still around, or at least we should be.

Wireless technology, while relatively new to many consumers, is of course not new at all. A few (very) old-timers remember the original "wireless" of radio. The revolution wrought by the pioneers of wireless changed the world then, and the technology behind that revolution has been re-invented and re-applied time and again. Its pre-eminent incarnation today is our near-ubiquitous wireless communications infrastructure, which has freed us from the shackles of landlines and made our mobile lifestyles possible. Technology truly is great stuff.

Until, of course, a monster hurricane comes along to render it nearly useless. Here we see a scenario in which a flood literally swept away the new. As Hurricane Katrina's fury hammered the Gulf states on August 29, the communications infrastructure took a devastating hit. Telephone service, including wireless, became at first intermittent and then unusable in many localities. Where there was phone service, 911 switchboards were often unreachable due to the massive volume of calls.

The response of local authorities, now termed "confused" by deposed FEMA chief Michael Brown, wasn't helping much. The Gulf Coast was about to descend into darkness, chaos, and, worst of all for many, silence.

But proponents of the old were at the ready. The "old," in this case, is ham radio. In the eyes of the "man on the street," ham radio has a pretty stodgy reputation. Aren't hams still using Morse code? Don't some of them use radios with tubes, for goodness sake? What the "man in the street" probably doesn't know is that it was amateurs who advanced the radio arts early in the 20th century. Down through the decades, amateurs have embraced (and often driven) all of the innovations in wireless technology, up to and including all digital modes and the Internet. But many have stayed in touch with their roots, which is good old-fashioned analog HF operation. And while amateurs have a longstanding tradition as innovators and experimenters, they also have a mandate that comes with their licenses: to be ready, willing, and able to provide emergency communications whenever and wherever they're needed.

As Katrina bore down on the Gulf region, amateur radio operators, under the aegis of the American Radio Relay League's (ARRL's) Amateur Radio Emergency Service (ARES), prepared to swing into action with emergency networks that would run health-and-welfare traffic into and out of the disaster zone. As early as the Monday following the storm, hams throughout the hurricane zone were putting emergency stations on the air. In one instance, hams were instrumental in the rescue of 15 people clinging for life to a New Orleans rooftop. Meanwhile, in Alabama, amateur SKYWARN weather nets kept the National Weather Service apprised of conditions throughout the state. In hard-hit sections of Mississippi, hams running off generators and with makeshift antennas were the only means of communication, getting word to out-of-state friends and relatives concerning their loved ones.

There were numerous other instances of hams helping those who were not simply inconvenienced by the storm, but whose lives were in imminent danger. Now that things have calmed down in the Gulf region, many of the emergency nets have stood down. But hams continue to serve the public in the many areas that are still without power or phone service.

As our nation collects itself in the aftermath of the Katrina disaster, President Bush has promised federal reviews of what went right and what went wrong. One of the findings of those inquiries should be that the federally-instituted Amateur Radio Service, which functions under the licensing authority of the FCC, stood tall when the country needed it.

Amateur radio currently faces various threats to its existence. Chief among those is the advent of broadband-over-powerline (BPL) technology, which, if broadly adopted, has the potential to cause widespread interference to HF communications, not just for amateurs but for other services that use the HF spectrum.

Amateurs and the ARRL have made a lot of noise about BPL, asserting that it could seriously hamper their efforts and those of relief agencies such as the Red Cross and Salvation Army, in the event of a disaster such as Katrina. It's rumored, though, that the same FCC commissioners who have given their blessing to BPL field trials will now take a much harder look at the technical issues concerning BPL and its interference potential in the HF spectrum. Let's face it: The federal government didn't handle the emergency in the Gulf very well; it'd be prudent for it not to sanction a technology that could impede one of the few things that actually worked.

Many readers of this newsletter are amateur radio enthusiasts. If you are, and if you haven't already done so, consider writing your congressman to express your concern about the future of the Amateur Radio Service, especially in light of its outstanding efforts in recent days. Remind your elected representatives that a vibrant and unimpeded Amateur service can and will be a lifesaver when disaster strikes. Also, consider how you yourself might help. What if a hurricane, tornado, or earthquake ravages your area? Are you prepared to get on the air without relying on the mains to handle emergency traffic? Get in touch with your local amateur-radio club and find out how you can pitch in.

Your cell phones and wireless routers are indeed great stuff, but so is a good old HF transceiver. We shouldn't always be in such a hurry to let the flood of new technology wash away the old. The geek down the block with all the antennas on his property could turn out to be your best friend someday. Because sometimes, old trumps new.

With respect to Ms. Jacobsen... For many years she was married to Chet Curtis, another local news anchor, a private pilot and I believe a ham radio operator as well. So it figures that she would have reacted to Romney's ill considered remarks dismissing the important role of amateur radio in disaster communications.

Big problem is all the lawyers on the FCC board,

only two of the current comm. have any tech
degrees, all the rest are lawyers and political types.

DTV, BPL oh yeah baby, the wave of the future.

Ain't gonna happen anywhere near the deadline. All analog TVs both past and present will be able to be used easily and cheaply at least during our lifetime...

Done.

I've also added the 42 "stevie" subject lines that I've counted

Fun reading for people who will have to make a determination on the

What deal?

You and Markie have significant misunderstandings of what constitutes a "deal", wager, bet, agreement, or any other word that insinuates a mutual understanding or intent to participate in cooperative exchange, Brain.

It requires agreed upon language and parameters, and finally an expression of intent to abide by that language and those parameters by BOTH parties.

All you've done all week is whine.

And at the end of the day, Brain, you've STILL not answered why you give others (OK...me...) a hard time about using diminutives, yet do it yourself with people who have NEVER done it to you...Not even remotely...

All of these are "new threads" or are subject line re-directs from Mark Morgan in the last 24 hours.

These don't even include the ones directed against Dave Heil.

Thirty-seven, and that doesn't count one's I may have missed where an author responded to a post with the original subject line that has masked a Markie response.

A couple will seem like "dupes". Only in that Markie used the same comments on different threads.

And Markie claims others are stalkers and are "wating to pounce" on him! (Notice the multiple screen names to get around Google!)

Enjoy!

No, Len. Just a simple statement of fact that you have a problem getting along with people who don't agree with everything you say.

Your behaviour here proves it.

Iambic A and B - do you know what those are? The Morse Code symbol for "@". Changes to standard ARRL message format, redefinition of some prosigns and Q signals....the list goes on and on.

That's true ;-)

It's also been in the regulations for 72 years, and 73 years, and 74 years,

and it's been in the regulations for 93 years.

Ancient history. ;-)

But isn't manual transmission a "dying" technology? Why would anyone bother to learn it in 2005?

Morse Code takes less power than voice transmission.

Your opinion only.

Aren't the majority of boats in the USA power boats? Even most sailboats above a certain size carry small motors. Most power boats don't carry sails.

>didn't have to know morse code to sail.

Except for a few floating museum pieces, the US Navy stopped using sail power about 100 years ago. There are almost no commercial uses for sailboats in the USA - powerboats dominate all but "hobby" boating,
and power boats probably dominate hobby boating as well.

How so? Did you get an amateur radio license?

Nope. Wrong. Incorrect.

Your Commercial license does not qualify you to operate an amateur radio station. Legally, you are the same as a person with no license at all when it comes to operating an amateur radio station.

> Secondly, I've never tested for any amateur > radio license

(that's good)

Incorrect again!

FCC considers every unlicensed person to be unqualified to operate an amateur radio station. That's why they issue licenses - to identify those who are qualified.

FCC says you're not qualified to operate an amateur radio station.

> Third, by law, to operate ON THE FREQUENCIES

Three wrongs in two counts!

The license is the qualification. By definition. FCC says you're not qualified to operate an amateur radio station.

Telling someone the Morse Code test is a good thing isn't hostile, Len.

It's so hard to keep track! Just yesterday a scandal forced a vote of no-confidence that toppled Prime Minister Paul Martin's government. Kickbacks and corruption did him in.

I'll take your word for it, as I missed your post. None of mine (including one in 1979) mention anything about "years and months in specialty". Closest it comes to that is Block 5 (Date of Rank).

THE only reason comment volume ( >6000 ) on incentive licensing was so high is because every General and every Advanced was going to LOSE privileges. Human nature is such that when threatened with a lose, people speak up...
but if the changes don't truly alter their current status then

It has a following in amateur radio, but that's

Maybe not dying, but taking a smaller role as each year moves forward. Are there absolute proofs that is so? No, but reality on the ham bands seems to me to indicate so. Your mileage may vary :-)

Given the cheap cost of a CB these days, I think that any emergency comms center should have a CB radio.
In my home town we had a RACES set-up and had several HF and VHF ham radios, scanners for Monitoring local police/fire/etc
AND at least one CB radio.

It wasn't anything, Hans.

Frankie the Twice Court Martialed Coward "mentions" something in one of his Lenniesque, windy pontifications, and if you don't comment on each and every line of it, he alleges you "don't know" what something was.

So far, what I've gotten from his "stuff" is that he's twice court martialed. He's spent time in the brig. He was pending his THIRD "promotion" to Lance Corporal when he was discharged which would have let he off the hook with his "Honorable" discharge.

He also alleges that if you don't use the exact same slang as he or were ever in "his" MAU, you never served in a "real" Marine unit.
But then he ALSO claims that since I obviously had time to participate in my choice of off-duty pursuits, I wasn't a "real" Marine either, at most "just" a Reservist...Of course there's a whole lot of Reservists in Iraq right now who'd take Frankie's potential to procreate and hand them to him for such a suggestion that they weren't "real" Marines.

I'm not sure from under what rock Frankie of Silliland crawled, but I am sure it was one that Markie peed on. Same stench.

Hi Folks:
I tried decoding this http://www.harryhydro.com/hamstuff/newmode1.wav 236k with Stream and MixW but I thinks this MFSK is too wide. There were several stations transmitting this around 14.106mHz. Recorded 11/29/2005. Does anyone know what this is? The band folded moments later.

Hams have minimal and the CB lobby is next to nothing.

I personally can't see where power line internet will be a real challenge to current copper phone lines and fiber. With Verizon spending billions to string fiber to individuals homes, it wont be long before the lawsu its begin and they will have to grant access to these. Once that happens powerline DSL in the US is a foot note in history.

And don't forget that Major Dud claims to have been discharged

now there's something you can look up in your bupers manuals -- how can someone get a medical discharge short of 20 years (17 years 9 months) yet have it converted to both an 'honorable' discharge -AND-get retirement status?

It's not about the spelling, you ignorant twit.

It's about your near-complete lack of understanding of grammatically correct English, both the comprehension of and the application of, that makes you so vunerable.

You're a fool. And "responses" like this one prove it.

Just the same as police/government communications then... so no need for the Hams after all.....

Not at all. My point was do Hams just talk to themselves or are they set up in important communications centres or are they at home, and phone up someone with the information passed to them?

If you had read my posts that was what i was referring to. Both services (CB and Ham) working together not CB instead of Ham... CB's could have been issued to the police to help organise themselves. They were not allowed Amateur gear because they arent licenced Hams. Then CB traffic passed on to Hams for the more distance and point to point stuff. THAT was what I was trying to get over.

Line up behind you.. oh right you seem to be in some sort of competition. Like I said before I wasn't posting about CB instead of Amateur, how many times do I need to point out what the post was about before it sinks in..... Now please put down that trumpet.....

My presumption (and it's only a guess) is that he was placed on the TDRL, which can "retire" medically disabled personnel with as few as eight years of active service. It's not a medical discharge, it's a medical retirement. There is no discharge which carries the name "Medical".

Oh yes!

Toiddie's "reputation" is well known around Taylorville, alright!

That's why the local ISP canned him, he can't get a job, and lives in the basement of mommy and daddy's house!

Uhhhhhh....Part 103 of the Federal Aviation Admisnistration's rules and regulations are NOT "soruce of authority", Markie? Toiddie started to spout off all the attribures of his "airplane", only to show a Team HiMAX ultralight photo. He made the mistake of bragging about illegal modifications to his ultralight.

His words.

Not mine.

You really need to put ALL the words into your "sentences",
Markie.

I wasn't "supporting" or "defending" anyone.

I was answering Franks question about how to get a medical discharge. ("how can someone get a medical discharge short of 20 years (17 years 9 months) yet have it converted to both an 'honorable' discharge -AND- get retirement status?")

Thank you for your interest in this matter, and feel free to call again if you have additional questions.

I see you "cut" the attributes, Markie!

Now, you're welcome, if yo can stand the humiliation, of trying to show where in that it says I don't understand how STD's are transmitted.

I stated, FACTUALLY, that my ONLY concern from YOU would to be assaulted by you and therein obtain an STD.

STD's are NOT "only" transmitted by mutually agreed-upon contact, Markie!

No, it does not.

Sure you are.

You have admitted, even bragged, about having sex with men in this USENET forum.

The only way to be MORE open would be to buy airtime on CNN.

Sure you are.

Refer to the "seeking fem dom" post.

So....

Two claims of "lies" proven to be themselves mistruthful.

What would be sick is WANTING to have sex with you...but then here again we have YOU propetuating yet another "debate" about your deviant

First, I'm not "aidning" anyone, except to answer questions. (In this case, questions from Frank.)

Second, you are incapable of any "consequence" that would be of any concern to me, so save your promises like "if I assult you it would be to kill you outright" for someone who takes them seriously. But first consult your lawyer.

I'm not "whining" about the mountains, I'm pointing out that a bunch of dumbshit politicians with dollar signs in their eyes made some stupid decisions (pardon the redundancies) and are trying to foist upon the public a technology that is both unnecessary and unworkable for a large number of people.

When my government takes something away from me for no good purpose, then I'm going to complain about it.

It's also curious that when I asked the chief engineer of a local VHF TV station, who is a personal friend, why they didn't put a UHF translator out my way he replied that they have wanted to for years but the FCC would not grant a license. That spectrum is too valuable, doncha know. So public interest isn't important, revenue is.

And I sure don't to pay big bucks to know what the weather is, when I can walk outside and get an accurate picture, rather that some wild-ass guess.

The ONLY REASON they canned me is because of those "FAKE" letters you sent them, including the one with the fake IP ADDRESS. There steve your lying, I live at the very top of the house on the fourth floor. (third if you don't count the basement) As for a "JOB" well first off I'm in college and secondly dip shit I own my own fucking business on the square here in taylorville, you fucking lying piece of shit.

Illegal modifications, well if that's the case then th FAA better go after vast majority of the Ultralight community because the vast majority of them are running "illegal ultralights". That was one of the main reasons the FAA created the sports license and why it only requires 20 hours of flying time and those that have had their hours in as a ultralight pilot is grandfathered into the sport license.

> and claims you are a pedophile...(SNIP)
> He is.

No steve my web site is an Anime site or for you fucking morons out there that short for ANIMATION, anime orginate from Japan, that's what i'm promoting and Not Pedophile. The Japanese Cartoons that childern see on TV are NOT what childern see in japan. The anime has been watered down but some stuff still gets through and you have to be a real anime fan to spot that stuff, like when the the characters pull down their eye lid and stick out their tongue that means fuck you. (watch some old episodes of pokemon and you see them do it). Another thing is when a guy is around a girl and is bushing and gets a bloody nose that means he thinking of perverted thoughts, I could tell you a lot more. and the language is toned down alot in japan the characters in anime's are known to say pissed, shit, and fuck once and a while. As for the board and the material on it, according to US Supreme court is legal and is protected under the first amendment. SEE http://straylight.law.cornell.edu/supct/html/00-795.ZS.html

Not true Steve, The first one, Dimension Unbound is a series I wrote back in the 1980's and is a BBS to allow people to get information on the series and create their own "Fanfiction" The second one is the Demented Otaku BBS gallery, and yes there is adult material on it but ot is restricted to people over the age of 18. Even if you join the gallery you still don't hve access to the hentai until you can prove your over the age of 18. The third is the Demented Otaku BBS, there is no pictures on that board any more all have been removed to the gallery for two reasons the first Access control and the second (which was the important one) it was eaiser to upload photos, unlike the other one where really only I was anble to upload photo's. this way anyone can upload photo's
The next one of course is the the Voice of amateur radio and well, there is No pictures on there, just bitches and complaints about the ARRL and their little bitches the Fascist Communiation Commission. The next one is The N9OGL BBS which is all ham radio stuff, no pictures really there, I believe there is a picture of the zoo I made in sims2 but that's about it. The last one is the Demented Otaku Chatline, no pictures there either, that's a live chat board like IRC and is very sledom used. But hey steve keep your lying we all need a good laugh from a whinny little worm like you.

the ARRL wanted to restrict the number that is recorded from many sources

that the result was ripping the guts out of the ARS by killing the HS clubs and making it rough to start one merely shows how out of touch the ARRl was even then

There's no violation of law if someone sends in a late comment.

Missing the deadline simply means FCC isn't required to consider the comment.

Analogy: When a government agency puts out a project proposal and requests bids, there's always a deadline. Submitting a bid after the deadline isn't a violation of any law, but the bid will rarely if ever be considered. (An exception might be made if there were no bids or no responsive bids before the deadline).

Ham Radio analogy: Contests usually have deadlines for log submissions. Sending in a late submission doesn't break the contest rules, but a late log submission probably won't make the writeup or qualify for any awards.

Not at all. The comments were split about even, for and against.

Shows how little you know of the subject.

The original 1963 ARRL proposal to FCC was simple: Return to the pre-1953
rule that required a ham to have an Advanced or Extra to work 'phone on
the ham bands between 2 and 25 MHz. Reopen the Advanced to new issues. No other changes.

Existing Advanceds and Extras would have lost nothing. Existing Generals and Conditionals needed only to pass a written test to get the Advanced and they'd have full privileges again. Simple and effective.

That proposal generated other proposals - at least 10 of them got RM numbers.
The complexity of incentive licensing comes from those other proposals.

> THE only reason comment volume ( >6000 ) on incentive
> licensing was so high is because every General and every > Advanced was going to LOSE privileges.

That's not exactly the case, Bill, as seen above, but it's of little consequence to your point. Regardless of which version or proposal we look at, large numbers of hams stood to either lose privileges or have the upgrade requirements for them raised.

> Human nature
> is such that when threatened with a lose, people speak up...
> but if the changes don't truly alter their current status then > most don't care and say nothing.

Agreed - particularly when so many considered their license privileges to be theirs for life.

But that was all beside my point.

What I was and am pointing out is that even back in 1964, when there was no internet, no email, no ECFS and the US ham population was less than 40% of what it is now, FCC received 6000+ comments on a major ham radio rules change proposal. Alternative proposals, too - without word processors, websites, newsgroups or online organizations.

IOW, Len's contention that the internet has somehow changed the ability of amateurs to contact FCC is not true. All ECFS has really done is make it faster and more convenient. But even in the bad old days thousands of hams were commenting directly to FCC.

For the price of a little study and a few tests, Len could have gotten his ham license 41 years ago. But he wasn't willing to expend the time or effort, and so he's missed out on 41 years of fun in amateur radio. No wonder he's so bitter....

> It has a following in amateur radio, but that's

Yep - the archery analogy is a good one. Archery isn't "dying" or a "dead end" just because guns exist. In fact, IIRC, here in PA the use of archery for deer hunting is on the rise.

Gee, Mark, do you ever actually listen to the HF amateur bands?
Particularly the parts where amateurs commonly use Morse Code?
>
> Maybe not dying, but taking a smaller role as each year moves > forward.

As there are more modes added, all of the existing ones are used a little less on a percentage basis.

Back in 1964, a ham on HF had the following mode choices:

Morse Code/CW
SSB voice
AM voice
NFM voice (very rare)
60 wpm Baudot-encoded RTTY (no other variety allowed) Fax (very rare)
SSTV (very rare)

And that was about it.

All those still exist today, plus a long list of newer modes like PSK31, PACTOR, etc.

> Are there absolute proofs that is so? No, but reality which is a very different thing from a "dying technique".

Translators are granted on a ''Secondary'' status meaning that if a higher priority use is sought for the channel the secondary user must vacate. Otherwise they chug on for years.

I'm afraid that is oversimplifying things a bit to much for Walt.

Walt cannot see the difference between a newly licensed amateur, a CB user, a pirate operator or a person who deliberately jams legitimate stations. To Walt all these people are "CBers". Any rational debate on the subject of any of these groups will only build on his "riff raff CBers" philosophy.

Amateur radio is no place for bigotry.

This makes two of your "When will steve and Dave face the truth" rants today, Colonel. You are still running my name in your crazy quest to have Steve discuss your sexuality.

After ascertaining that you were also directing the question to me, I gave you an answer. I'll give you a very similar response today: It really makes no difference whether you have an amateur radio license or not, Colonel. You'd still be a notorious liar and a shrill, illiterate, bisexual pervert. No radio amateur would have likely known about your sexual preferences had it not been for your misguided personals posting. That was about as revealing as could be.

Nothing compels me to hide my disgust at your sexual perversity, which goes much farther than just bisexuality. Nothing forces me to accept you as a moral being. I'm not forced to like you or to pretend that I believe that nothing is completely right or completely wrong.

You've lied about any number of things since your appearance in r.r.a.p, yet you are the first to call someone (many someones) a liar.

You've written about morality but you don't seem to know what it means.

You've whined about your "rights" but you seemingly accept no responsibilities for your actions or your inactions.

Of late, you are fouling this newsgroup as much as any of the visiting sociopaths.

You've had your question answered. I didn't really expect that you'd care for the answer.

It is obvious that your recent run of posts concerning your sexuality is a cry for attention. Well, you've certainly gotten it. You have the stage and the spotlight. Do you have anything coherent to say while you're in the limelight?

You need to re-familiarize yourself with the Constitution of the United States and the Bill of Rights, Markie.

Also, you've expsoed yourseolf as having never served in the Armed Forces, since if you'd had, you'd at least have a rough idea what was in that oath and know that your "argument" here was no where near being accurate.

anything for a few extra points eh ? !!

non-contestors are encouraged to us 10-18-24 during contests !!!

what a load of horse-do-do.

i've suspected for a long time that rf contests were effectively an "anatomy" measuring contest.

my observations last week of the allegedly more-clued-in cw operator left me with the definite impression that there is a growing number who couldnt i wonder if any of the contest rules actually ban operation on 14100 ?

if yes, which ones...
i think its time for some check-logs to be sent in.

Your "question" has been answered several times over now, but you keep fishing for a different answer.

So it seems the "obsession" is yours!

(2) Your admission that you're intentionally spamming the group

All five of the Commissioners are political types - have to be in order to be appointed and confirmed to that position.

Two with technical degrees? In your dreams. The last "engineer Commissioner" was George Sterling during the late 1940s. In the 1980s some of us wanted to have the Comm Act changed to require at least one to have an engineering degree but we were shot doen by the political types.

No, the "vast majority" are not.

I am around a LOT of ultralights and only know of 2 that have anything that might even be close to what you claim to ahve done...And that was only because they were carrying an extra can of gas...But it wasn't hooked to the fuel line system.

One of the "main reasons" the FAA created the Sport Pilot category was the efforts of the Experimental Aircraft Association.

If you'd read, Markie, you'd have seen my answer THREE TIMES today.

But you've been so anxious to keep this assinine behaviour going that you've either ignored it, or simply don't like it.

In either case, YOU are the one responsible for spamming the NG.

Just one more reason to laugh at you....As if we NEEDED one more!

Well, Mark, if ever there was to be proof that you are mentally coming unraveled, your lengthy series of spam posts should do the trick.

Another presumption? like the TDRL presumption? Why not presume that he got a hardship discharge? or a separation due to inability to meet the requirements for promotion (after all, he claims to have been promoted to Sergeant within 5 years, meaning he was only promoted twice in the following 13 years -- not exactly a stellar record of achievement)?

Anyway, now that you have seen my DD-214, why do you think K4YZ, after claiming to have nearly 18 years active duty and several DD-214's, made the stupendous blunder of confusing "years and months in specialty" with time in service? And when confronted with the false claim that his DD-214 did not have a box for character of service, why do you think he failed to provide even the form's box number as proof that I was wrong? And why do you suppose he changed his story on the number of DD-214's he has aquired?

Feel free to speculate.

BTW, why do you suppose -HE- is unwilling to explain these things, and instead relying upon you and others to counter his critics with opinionated presumptions and facts that he is unwilling to find for himself? Ya know, I've seen a few "documentaries" (using the word loosely) on the Kennedy assassination. Many of them seek to dispell conspiracy theories by demonstrating possible but unlikely scenarios of how the Warren Commission conclusions could be correct. Yet no matter how many ways they prove that there -could- have been a lone gunman, such scenarios can never be proof that there -was- a lone gunman. In fact, if LHO went to trial, the prosecution would have had the burden of proving guilt beyond a reasonable doubt -- NOT merely proving that there was a -possibility- of guilt. Catch my drift?

Not at all. It shows the incentive licensing concept had lots of support and lots of opposition - 40+ years ago.

How did incentive licensing affect highscool radio clubs?

Jim is right. Anyone can send the FCC comments, messages, etc at anytime. The sending or submission of a comment outside the comment period is NOT a violation of the law. The only violation of law that could be in play then is IF and only IF the FCC accepted and integrated the comment into the FCC
proceedings...BUT, even then I suspect if anyone complained that the courts would take a less than hard-line stand regarding post deadline comments.

Of course the FCC could read a post deadline comment and consider it in their braod internal review process and never make reference to it in a follow-up R&O. Who outside the FCC would even know?

What did you say that was open for misinterpretation? In fact, what did you say at all, other than a couple unqualified presumptions that supported only the -possibility- that K4YZ's claim -might- be true?

You jumped into this discussion as the military legal expert. Are you now opting out with a presumption about my anticipated response? And here I was expecting to engage in the second intelligent and coherent discussion I would have had in this newsgroup -- the first was with Len about Morse code.

strawman

never said the sending of a late coment is crime

I said for the FCC to consider to violate the concept of the rule of law

it flouts the intent of the craetion fot he legal framwork that is obvious realy

something killed them about the same time

also the restriction of HF that result make them obviously unattractive even today the presense of the morse code test has made the efforts of a gruop of teachers to gte a new club off the ground (with uqipement left the schoool by a late ham ) the kids simply aren't interested

the evidence at hand suggests that sorry conclusion

we have the yearsof abusive behavoir by by K4YZ a classic hallmark of the abused child and why/how did N8DOS abuse his child? the logic of it and the eveidence of our eyes is that The boy that would grow in K4YZ must have lied and been abused for it in an effort to stop it not knowing the extent to which the young steve was lying we can only guess how much it took to get steve to point where the thought of lie was enough to send him into a rage. , given the angstroms thin skin Steve now has

it may not have even seemd like abuse, but sadly it was too much for the unstable mind of the child that is steve too bad very sad

Hi there
I may be one of the people Akasha has reffered, but then again I am not. One I am a switch, not a sub.Second, I have lurked because till recently (couple of days ago) I lacked the real power to easily post.
As a switch I known, will always know abit about both sides of the equation. I have felt the hunger to control and dominate someone. (male or female) I felt that desire to do anything to please (even things I might not done all on my own) Pesonaly the fact, that I have felt that deep gnawing hunger that comes from time to time, only serves to intensify the desire please, and fill that need for some one that I admire, and expand's what I will do. I have felt, esp lately desire to let go and stop having to decide do I this or that and lose myself
within the maze that I find submission to be, the pain only serves to strenghen that maze (to a point) and deepen the release from an aver
more complicated world, into a world where nothing exists but the will of my Master(s)and/or Mistress(es).

That's the wrong reason to change parties. First of all, look at your values and compare them to the values & policies of the various parties. Join that party whatever it may be and whoever may be the leaders. Then if you don't like the leaders, work your arse off to get different leaders within the party. What good does it do you to joint a party which may be diametrically opposed to your points of view !?

Oh really what's that?? post from here??? well Congress pass a law a few years ago in which the internet service provider was not responsible for the actions of it users on the internet, In fact the only action they were really allowed to take was if the material resided on THEIR computer, this of course ws up held by the US court of Appeal. And I'm sure Stebie that you showed them your abusive behavior in the threads.....No, you wouldn't of had the balls to do that now would you?? WRONG STEBIE, I've been around ultralights since 1999 and people that have them and yes the vast majority are running a little more gas in their tanks and or carrying gas with them for those LONG distance flights.

They are Fascist nd you their little CUNT boy, and BTW steve Unless you can prove that I wrote it in crayon, my suggestion to you is put up or shut up, the fat of the matter was the FCC didn't consider my application or my waiver because it wasn't filed during a filing window, unfortunately waivers can be filed at anytime, the problem is the FCC isn't doing their job by consider the waiver or not, in fact the only time the FCC considers a waiver is after the federal court tells them to do so. But hey that's ok, I'll run my little show on the amateur band what are they out you going to about it??? It's no lie.

It's not up to you (or anyone else) to decide what's "OT" or not and to "kill" the thread.

Anything else is censorship.

It serves to indicate that there are some (allegedly "qualified") radio amateurs who cannot keep up with basic law and regulations.

FCC 99-412 R&O (Memorandum Report and Order) was issued in late December 1999 establishing the "Restructuring" of U. S. radio amateur regulations to take effect in mid-2000. Comments on Wireless Telecommunications Bureau Docket 98-143 are superfluous to both the public and the Commission AFTER an R&O has established the NEW regulations. There can be no question that "comments" made in August 2005 on any issue that was settled 5 years prior are superfluous and irrelevant to the Docket subject.

No, only disingenuous. Phil Kane ought to jump in here and explain the process on proceedings, "sunschine laws" and the like. Some Dockets visible on the ECFS have rather bold red notices included about what the Commission staff can CONSIDER insofar as reaching a decision on any Docket subject. That is law insofar as the Commission has decided for itself.

>Anyone can send the FCC comments, messages, etc at anytime.

True, but only because the Commission leaves the ECFS and Secretary's incoming correspondence desk OPEN for several reasons: Viewing by the public as an archive, most convenient to the public unable to access the FCC Reading Room thousands of miles away; supplemental information on the Docket subject such as opening up a new Petition for change or revision by the Commission of some part of a Docket subject at a later date.

>The sending or submission of a comment outside >the comment period is NOT a violation of the law.

The one "charging" this "violation" first was Miccolis. There is NO explicit "law" or regulation forbidding such filing after a comment deadline date. However, as explained above, the Commission staff is obliged to act on ITS OWN REGULATIONS which have stated the "official" dates of comment filings.

The use of specific comment period dates serves as a convenience for both the public and Commission. The Commission is required to regulate many civil radio services and as a result has a large number of tasks required by both Congressional Law and its own regulations. Comment periods cannot be open-ended and have any reasonable conclusion.

>The only
>violation of law that could be in play then is IF and only IF the >FCC accepted and integrated the comment into the FCC
>proceedings...BUT, even then I suspect if anyone complained >that the courts would take a less than hard-line stand regarding >post deadline comments.

See Part 0, Title 47 C.F.R. See Communications Act of 1934.
See Telecommunications Act of 1996.

Comment period statements by the Commission are not "illegal" but PROCEDURAL. Since the Commission has stated a Notice of PROPOSED Rulemaking, it must - at some point - make a DECISION on this proposed rulemaking. Ergo, it establishes a deadline for comments from the public to give the Commission sufficient time to reach a decision on this proposed rulemaking. That is reasonable and logical for the Commission's purpose and task.

>>> >Missing the deadline simply means FCC isn't required to consider >>> >the comment.
>
>>> it means the FCC SHOULD not and I think is legaly barred form

>>> considering it
>
>> That's not the same as breaking a law.

There is NO SPECIFIC LAW in regards to comment date periods being stated by the Commission. There IS its own regulation (see Part 0) and the "sunshine law" precedents in regards to what the Commission allows ITSELF to "see."

>Of course the FCC could read a post deadline comment and
>consider it in their braod internal review process and never >make reference to it in a follow-up R&O. Who outside

The "barracks lawyers" who will endlessly "debate" some decision/action by any agency, long past any reasonable time of argument. :-)

There are some in here who "know" what the FCC is doing even though they've never worked there.

There are over 9.700 club licenses in the FCC database right

Frank, Hans will do the "Mission Impossible" thing here, he will suddenly (upon confrontation) claim "the secretary will disavow his actions" or something like that. Then his "tape" will selfdestruct and he sails off into the sunset without a care in the world as if he never said anything... :-)

Dudly hasn't posted a damn thing to prove his alleged service.
Of course, if one hasn't served, then they have no proof.

It's a form of "good old boy network" unit cohesiveness. :-)

Amateur extras think they have to hang together. That beats the lonliness of hanging separately... :-(

The comparison to Lee Harvey Oswald is apropo. Oswald was a Marine. Oswald assassinated JFK...as well as a Dallas PD Officer. The problem is that Oswald DID have a Marine record.
We don't know if there IS a Marine record for Dudly. Dudly tries to verbally "assassinate" anyone who speaks against him.
The difference is that Oswald hit his target. Dudly has not.

Nice form-letter boilerplate phrasing. Not applicable here.

All that is needed for REAL PROOF is to have Dudly make available
HIS documents. He has NOT done that.

All you've done lately is to quote from some USN Bureau of Personnel instructions. YOU CANNOT confirm that Dudly was ever IN either the USN or the USMC. BUPERINST 1900.8B does NOT pertain to amateur radio.

Do you understand these questions that have been asked? If not,

You have no valid comparison to morse code. Try not to venture into areas where you have no competence.

When my wife and I got our new 2005 Chevy Malibu in June, we both had to learn part of its transmission control, very different in it's "low" setting from previous Chevrolets with automatic transmission. That automatic transmission allows manual gear changing. The automatic transmission on our older 1992 Chevy Cavalier Wagon allowed manual gear changing. The automatic transmission on our even older 1982 Chevy Berlinetta Camaro (as well as my old '70 Camaro and '67 Camaro) allowed manual gear changing.

>> Didn't have to know morse code to drive...

>But isn't manual transmission a "dying" technology? Why would anyone >bother to learn it in 2005?

Manual transmission is not favored in many states due to emission limits, by law, not by the fact that manual transmissions are a decided inconvenience.

Truck-tractors have manual transmissions. Most cars equipped with automatic transmissions can also do manual gear changing; they just don't have any clutch.

>> >- sailboats instead of power boats

There is NO federal requirement to learn morse code in order to pilot a sailing vessel.

Obviously you've never been on a water vessel that had "sound-powered" telecommunications sets. No DC or AC power needed to operate them. There is no equivalent for telegraphy.

>Except for a few floating museum pieces, the US Navy stopped using >sail power about 100 years ago.

Go to the docking area at the U.S. Naval Academy or the U.S. Coast Guard Academy. Are those "tall ships" illusions? No, they are real.

No morse code skill is needed to pilot a sail or power boat.

>There are almost no commercial uses
>for sailboats in the USA - powerboats dominate all but "hobby" boating,

>and power boats probably dominate hobby boating as well.

That is an absolute? Very well, we will put you down as a claimed "Master of Marine Craft."

There are NO commercial uses for morse code skill in the USA except for the companies selling morse code practice material.

>> >- Drawing and painting instead of photography
>>

>Still have your crayons, huh?

Ha. Ha. You would be a hit at the Art Center School of Design in the Pasadena area of Greater Los Angeles. Pasadena forensics could practice on what was left of you after saying that. When I went to Art Center it was in the city of Los Angeles, on 3rd Street, somewhat near CBS City and the Pan-Pacific Auditorium.

Do you need lessons in art, illustration, or photography? I can give you them and show how it is done by actual examples. My photographs and illustrations have been published in national magazines. I can work with nearly all media in art and illustration: pencil, pen, (yes) crayon (but of a type that isn't sold to children), chalk, ink on scratchboard, Ben Day screen illustration board, oils, watercolors, caesin paints, brush or air-brush (my Paasche air-brush compressor still works although I preferred the CO2 bottle pressure system common in commercial practice). I've given up "canvas" for painting in preference for the finer linen media.

Tell us how morse code skill is used in art or illustration or photography?

It would further prove the efficacy of "morse code efficiency"

What isn't science is technology. Application of electronic technology is done in electrical and electronic engineering.

You have never, ever been subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice. You have never had a DD-214 issued to you. You will never have a DD-214 issued to you. You cannot ever understand the actual implications of the UCMJ other than some casual thing that applies only to others.

The evidence is the filings on WT Docket 05-235. All 3,796 of them from 15 July 2005 to 25 November 2005. Note that one more has been added in the ECFS.

There is NO "evidence" at www.ah0a.org except in the highly-biased opinion of a long-time morseman...one whose Petitions before the Commission have been DENIED.

>Your Commercial license does not qualify you to operate an

Your amateur radio operator's license does NOT "qualify" you to operate any commercial radio station, radionavigation station, space-communications station, radiosonde station, radar of any kind, television transmitter, aircraft transmitter, maritime vessel transmitter, land mobile radio service transmitter, or microwave radio relay station.
Mine does.

over NPRM 05-143?

>Incorrect again!

You do not understand the difference between "qualified" and AUTHORIZED.

>FCC considers every unlicensed person to be unqualified to operate >an amateur radio station. That's why they issue licenses - to identify >those who are qualified.

Wrong. The FCC issues licenses as part of their overall civil radio regulatory task.

The FCC was never chartered by LAW to be an academic or skill-achievement agency. They AUTHORIZE license holders to operate and transmit RF energy according to the regulations pertaining to the type and kind of radio service they are AUTHORIZED in.

>FCC says you're not qualified to operate an amateur radio station.

The FCC has "said" no such thing to me. They've never once written to me that I am "unqualified" in anything...

>The license is the qualification.

It is an AUTHORIZATION. It is a PERMISSION. It is a GRANT.

>By definition. FCC says you're >not qualified to operate an amateur radio station.

No, I am not permitted - by regulation - to transmit RF energy exceeding incidental RF radiation limits on allocated amateur-only frequencies without possessing an amateur radio license grant.

The military of the United States and the federal government of the United States (other than the FCC) have QUALIFIED me to operate radio transmitters according to military/government regulations. Experience in actual successful transmission of RF energy has furthered that qualification.

Some of your facts are mistaken. That's just the way it is.

>> I was against the code test long before Bruce Perens put NCI

Go to the FCC Reading Room and look up correspondence to them prior to the earliest ECFS-available date. That is an unalterable third-party reference.

I did not keep ALL correspondence I've done in the last four decades. I cannot digitize and present what I no longer have.
The FCC Reading Room keeps records intact, archived.

More hostility and combativeness. Tsk, NOT "getting along with others" on your part.

I have never taken any amateur radio license test, therefore I neither "passed" nor "failed" it. That only proves the PAST.

You stated what I allegedly "could not do" in the future.
You are not prescient, cannot tell the future. Ergo, your remark is simply one of hostility and combatativeness.

>Telling someone the Morse Code test is a good thing isn't hostile, Len.

Sorry, it IS hostile when you presume your opinion to be an absolute. It is only your opinion. You frequently try to make your opinions as absolutes. That is wrong.

>Not me. I'm not the one who's afraid to turn on a receiver and >listen to the low ends of the HF amateur bands....

Your implication of "cowardice" is misplaced. First, I was not at any HF receiver during most of the Thanksgiving Day holiday weekend. Second, I've already "turned on and listened" to all parts of the MF and HF spectrum...many times...even looked at it with a spectrum analyzer.

>> At the end of my "first job in radio" I got a DD-214. You don't You've never served in the armed forces of the United States.

Had you done so, you would have received a DD-214 as a release from active duty. You've said you did not serve, ergo you cannot have a DD-214. You will never have a DD-214.

>> "It must drive you nuts not knowing" what my interests are... :-)

Incorrect again. All you "know" is what I've written in here.
I've not written about all of my "interests" or "what I've done" or "what I do."

Where in Part 97 does it say that anyone cannot comment outside the deadline dates?

You've pointed out how many comments FCC received before the official date....

Not the point.

Is there a violation of law if someone sends in a late comment?

Of course. But that's not the point. Mark is saying the law is violated if someone sends in a late comment.

Nope. Not me.

Mark Morgan made that claim, not me.

Here, take another look:

Mark wrote:

"becuase it isn't suposed to happen at least if it does they are all supposed to have been mailed before the deadline why does it seem you don't care about the rule of of law when it suits you"

and I wrote:

"There's no violation of law if someone sends in a late comment."

to which Mark replied:

"sure is"

Now, who made the claim? Sure wasn't anybody named "Miccolis"

Mark says there is. I say there isn't.

> However, as explained above, the

And a whole bunch of nocodetest folks ignored those rules and sent in comments before the official date....

Also obvious. And beside the point completely.

Tell Mark about it.

Your date of rank wasn't anything? or your character of service wasn't anything?

Gosh, that's terrible. It's just terrible.

"Honourable"

It's just awful when others tell lies about you, isn't it?

It must really suck to get larger doses of the treatment that you like to dish out.

Best of Luck getting Frank off of your pathetic, lying self.

Bush (1st) gave the order to drawdown the services, and later Clinton implemented it.

It was called "The Peace Dividend."

One method was the early retirement, I think it was minus 2% for each year retired early. Critical career fields were exempted from the offer. RIFfed officers were given a severance package.

But 1992 is one year too early for Steve's retirement to have been part of the drawdown. Bush left office in January 1993, shortly after visiting us in Somalia.

Outside of inadequate troop strength, what has America to show for The Peace Dividend?
